[illegible]

"Welcome, welcome, ye perils stern,
Welcome, welcome, unto me!
While on the foaming wave I burn
Fame's wreath for you and me.
The spirit-stirring trumpet's blast
Is calling me, is calling me;
Now, now, my choice is made at last,
A Soldier I will be!

"Adieu, adieu, my native shore,
Fades from my eager eye;
Adieu, adieu, the cliffs that bore
Me when a boy so high.
Adieu, adieu, my sisters dear,
Sobbing so loud and free;
Adieu, adieu, my mother dear,
Weep not for me!

"Adieu, adieu, my native home,
Fades from my eager eye;
Adieu, adieu, the spires that dome
The sacred days gone by.
Adieu, adieu, the village maid
Whose tears flow down like rain;
Adieu, adieu, the church-yard glade
Where I shall ne'er be seen again.

"Adieu, adieu, my native land,
Fades from my eager eye;
Adieu, adieu, the strand
Where my forefathers lie.
Adieu, adieu, my Bible book,
Which I have read so often;
Adieu, adieu, my pious look
Which I shall wear no more.

"Adieu, adieu, the lessons kind
Which I was taught to prize;
Adieu, adieu, the peace of mind
Which dwells in virtuous eyes.
Adieu, adieu, the Sabbath bell
Which rings so sweet and free;
Adieu, adieu, the church where I
Shall kneel no more with thee.

"Adieu, adieu, my native town,
Fades from my eager eye;
Adieu, adieu, the chimney brown
Where the blue smoke doth lie.
Adieu, adieu, the rural charms
Which I shall see no more;
Adieu, adieu, my father's arms
Which oft my youth upbore.

"And Mother, we shall meet no more,
While merry rings the bell;
'Tis God, my all for evermore above,
That doeth all things well.
I solemnly commend
And while the evening shades my soul,
Sinner though she proved, I kiss the chime,
And freely pardon all."

A Gas stove an Gas Meter.—It has since frequently been found necessary to alter the Gas Stove, and the Meter is now compelled to find room in the Kitchen, and not in the Parlour, as originally intended. The Meter is of larger dimensions, and requires more room than the Stove; and the Meter and Stove must remain where they are placed at the Service. Mrs. Lee has retained such apartments at the Service. Mrs. Lee has retained such apartments at the Service. Mrs. Lee has retained such apartments
