

GODS' WAYS.

[One of the finest religious poems we have ever read; one which true men of all sects, and true men of no sect, may read with high pleasure, and re-read many times. We know not who is the Poet that sings so grandly and simply of God's Ways, as the Poem is almost in the papers without credit.]

Oh! it is hard to work for God, To rise and take his part Upon the wide-field of earth, And not sometimes lose heart.

He hides himself so wondrously, As though there were no God;
He is least seen when all the powers Of ill are most abroad.

Or He deserts us at the hour
The fight is almost lost;
And seems to leave us to ourselves Just when we need him most.

Ill masters good; good seems to change.
To ill with greatest ease;
And, worst of all, the good with good Is at cross purposes.

It is not so; but so it looks;
And we lose courage then;
And dwell on evil as if God hath kept His promises to men.

Al! God is other than we think;
His ways are far above, Far above reason's height, and reached Only by child-like love.

The look, the fashion of God's ways Love's life-long study are;
She can be bold, and guess, and act, When reason would not dare.

She has a prudence of her own;
Her step is firm and free;
Yet there is cautious science here;
In her simplicity.

Workman of God! O love not heart, But learn that God is like;
And in the darkest battle-field Thou shalt know where to strike.

Oh, bless'd is he to whom is given The instinct that can tell That he is in the field when he Is most invisible!

And bless'd is he who can divine Where there right took lie, And dare to take the side that seems Wrong to man's blindfold eye!

Oh, learn to scour the ways of men!
Oh, learn to love with God!

For Jesus won the world through shame, And beckons there his road.

God's glory is a 'wondrous thing, Most strange in all its ways,
And of all things on earth, least like What men agree to praise.

Muse on His justice, downcast soul!
Muse and take better heart;
Back with thine angel to the field;
Good luck shall crown thy part!

God's justice is a bed where men Our anxious hearts may lay,
And with His arms, ourselves, may sleep Our discontent away.

It is admitted on all hands that their no being in creation so beautiful, in the est mation of man, as the angels, and that a certain attraction on the part of the children in centre and cluster around those beautiful human flowers, as it has been po etically and very justly expressed. There ar no classes exempt from a foible in referen to the attractions of those fair nymphs, wh the poets so fondly and graphically de scribe. From the cradle to the grave, the cromdromer, down to the squallid seave that sweeps the streets of London, all hav confessed their power to please. Woman with her thousand charms and love-inspirin aspect, and pleasure-breathing tones, ho admirably adapted to render life more ple ant—to make the future look bright ar glorious, and to exert a cheering influen of the "oil and mol" of business; by h cheerful countenance and the tranquillisi and salutary influence of her society; gladden the heart of the drooping and dow east husband, whose heart, maybe, is aff with "withering thoughts that the world cannot know"; to smooth the dying pil and cheer the sick, and to soothe the higher and better state of being.

But, since women are so beautiful, charming, and so useful, we shall endeavor to describe those who are worthy the respec the love and the confidence of man; and doing this, we shall have, perforce, to di tinguish the worthy from the unworthy, th virtuous from the vicious, the morally be tiful from the morally deformed. The essence of beauty, in our opinion, consist in piety and virtue, in lustre of mind and purity of sentiment, in short, in "magnani ty of soul." In Milton's Paradise Lost when Adam is introduced to Eve, she is re presented as a "Grecian Venus, by whose shape and stature, but the lustre of her mind which shone in them, and gave the their power of charming:—

"Grace was in all her steps, Heaven in her In all her gestures, dignity and love."

Compared with a woman of this stamp, ho faint and spiritless are the charms of the coquette. Think of the real loveliness of of an Helen's innocence, piety, good hum cast, and virtuousness; but the lustre of and truth,—virtues which "add a new soft ness to her sex, and even beautify her bea ty!" How irresistibly is one's heart draw towards the modest, chaste, unassuming fair one, whose eyes, so eloquently bright, spe only of love, innocence, and purity; her per son is symmetrical, her features are charmi ing, her manners are all that is best; her cast, and her countenance, that sheds all etiquette; and her whole person is embelli shed with the proper ornaments of virtuous and commendable qualities. She is a model for a painter to copy after, an exemplar i morals, and will be an inestimable treasur to him who gets her.

Let us now proceed to describe a differ ent sort of one on fair jade, with the see thick smirk ingrained on her face; see ho many airs she puts on to catch the eye How gaudily she is tricked out. What mo stuous hoops! and what a pretty hat! an to crown all, how elegantly and tastfully s timpers. She has long dress, marked, laced and inwardly disguised, red, blue, and purple, that she has an infinite pains in jollin out her tongue, in rubbing her nose with he handkerchief, in telling you surprising an foolish stories, in giving you a summary o all her beaux, in entertaining you with a account of all clever things she says to he her suitors, and the many nice things that they invent and tell about her; in short, i and being so full of information, you, so designated by practically, and to all intent and purposes, that she is the greatest foun on "this side creation," as Mr. Slick would say. Her beaux are just like herself, vain shallow-pated, puffed up with a silly conce it of their own greatness. They appear puffing fair to an angel of good sense, but y they are all white-washed sensualists, i wardly rottenness and vanity. I need sc arcely remark that much of that which i observed in the children is owing to the teaching and influence of their parents that many of the worst lessons learned by is observed in the children is owing to th teaching and influence of their parents that many of the worst lessons learned b youth are picked up around their hearth and bed; hence the dear child that young should take of their “better half.”

Many of those who are justly denominated and rakes, were encouraged in the formation of that character by their parents. We shall tell, briefly, how it may be done. A young dangle comes to a certain house, pretending to make advances to a certain young lady of that house. In prosecuting this scheme, a little, party—a very bad sitting-up night may be necessary. The old dame takes the hint, leaves all to say their own prayers for that night, and post off to bed. No one will pretend to deny that the custom of sitting up to a very late hour might any early-hour, is a very bad habit, and highly to be censured. Further, that such a practice defeats the very object for which it is done. No young gentlemen, we apprehend, will think any more of a young lady by such an exhibition of their minds in reference to him. On the contrary, he will very surely think less. Having said something about both classes—the virtuous and the vicious, and pointed out, to a considerable degree, the tone of morality by which each is characterized, we shall lay down a few general principles, which it would be well for the fair sex to ruminate upon and observe; for being persuaded that much good would accrue to their selves as well as others from their strict observance; especially to themselves. (That no woman can be handsome from the force of features alone, any more than she can be witty by the help of speech only.) "That pride destroys all symmetry of grace, and affection is a more terrible enemy than the smallox." "That no woman is capable of being beautiful, who is not incapable of being false; and that which would be odious in a friar, is still more so in a woman." From these few principles, thus laid down, it will be seen that I do not value beauty in one sense of the term, as much as some. Colors artfully spread upon canvass may entertain the eye, but not affect the heart; and she who takes no care to add to the natural graces of a person any excellent qualities, will still be allowed to amount to a picture, but not to triumph as a beauty.

JULY DECORUM.

STATISTICS OF HUMAN LIFE.

The total number of human beings on earth is now computed in round numbers at 1,000,000,000. They speak 3,004 national tongues, and of which upward of 1,100 religious or creeds are preached. The average age of life is 334 years. One-fourth of the born die before they reach the age of 7 years, and the half before the 17 year. Out of 100 persons only six reach the age of 60 years and upward, while one in 1,000 reaches the age of 100 years. Out of 500 only one lives to 80 years. Of the thousand million living persons 3,000,000 die annually, 11,000 daily, 37 every hour, 60 every minute, consequently one every second. The loss is, however, balanced by the gain in new births. Tall men are supposed to live longer than short ones. Women are generally stronger proportionately than men until their 50th year, after which less and less. Men are in proportion to single life (bachelors and spinsters) 1:10:75. Both births and deaths are more frequent in the night than in the day. One-fourth of men are capable of bearing arms, but not one out of 1,000 is by nature inclined for the profession. The notion of education calcifies and degenerates. The human frame is not borne out by fact.

TINNING CAST-IRON ARTICLES.

Many articles such as bridle bits, snaffles, &c., are manufactured of tinned iron. Saucapans, goblets and other hollow iron ware, are tinned upon their inner surfaces. They are first scoured bright with sand and dilute sulphuric acid, then washed thoroughly in soft water and dried. They are then placed over a fire and heated, when again tin is poured in the vessel moved so as to roll the molten tin over the surface. Some powdered rosin is added to prevent oxide from forming on the surface of the iron. Hollowed vessels of copper and brass are tinned in the same manner.

TINNING IRON.—Cast-iron articles to be tinned, are first scoured bright with sulphuric acid and sand, then washed in clean water and dried. They are afterwards placed upon the top of the zinc, by dipping the pieces into molten tin. When the tin operation is finished the articles are placed in boiling water, and allowed to cool slowly.

In the ruins of Herculaneum the excavations are carried on actively. Toward the latter end of December two lions were found in that town, half a metre long, carved in marble. The style was Grecian of a high order of art. Other interesting objects have been recovered, such as fragments of buried wooden furniture, chess boxes, coffers, constructed of bamboo or ebony and shodstones &c.

Gheddies made of old carpets and blankets and is frequently mixed with long wool spun in filling. Noils is a name for a short wool which is combed from the under wool when the latter is employed for making worsted and kerseys.

A street railway 12 miles long has been laid down, and is now in operation, in New South Wales. The rails and carriages for this street railway have been sent out from England by Mr. Train.
