Cauliflower is handled in the same way as cabbage. If cauliflower gets a severe setback in transplanting to the field, it will tend to cause it to go to seed instead of to form a good head. More especially is this so with the early crop in the warm summer weather. In many small gardens it is generally grown as a fall crop. The plants are slower growers than cabbage and will do better if started about two weeks earlier if we wish a maximum number of good heads. When the cauliflower shows a head about two inches in diameter the outer leaves should be drawn together and tied so as to exclude the light, thus giving a pure white head. Cauliflowers that have not fully developed may be dug up, roots and all, and hung in a cool cellar. There they will continue to grow, giving a delicious head after the ordinary season of cauliflower is over. Fully developed heads may be cut off, wrapped in oil paper and stored in a cold room at 32 deg. F. to 34 deg. F. Here they will keep well till Christmas time.—A. H. MacLennan, Vegetable Specialist, Toronto.

Mustard.

Fields that are heavily infested with mustard can frequently be turned to good account by using such areas for the production of silage foders. The sowing of peas and oats in the proportion of one bushel of oats to one bushel of peas per acre (the mustard will come volunteer), will make a very acceptable silage. Mustard has a high feeding value, and the seed in the soil can be exhausted in time by following the practice of using mustard infested lands for silage crops, cutting the entire mass, cereal, legume and weeds and putting all in the silo in a finely cut and packed condition.
