The Provincial Wesleyan.

The Little Sister. BY MARY IRVING.

" Of such is the kingdom of heaven. Golden-haired and heaven-eyed, Sits a wee one by my side, Looking up and smiling ; White as daisy in July, From the sun's great guardian eve Warmth and sweetness wiling.

Never dream of poet-heart-Never miracle of art Won a fairer treasure 'Tis a budding woman soul Baptized in the beautiful-Best of angels, bless her

All the day-time she has played, Where the bees their murmurs made With her glad self only : Making sweet companionshi With the clover-flowers they sip-Scorning to be lonely !

Often on her upturned face, For a moment's golden space, Falls the light of dreaming Quietly she sits and sings Quaint and wild imaginings. To the wind-harp's hymning

Oftener-darling that she is, Comes she for a smile or kiss, With her words of wonder ; What has whispered in her ear Fantasies we start to hear-Smile-and sigh-to ponder

Speaks a cherub from the sky. When she lifts her loving eye, Winning him with gladnes Almost think we he hath given To her hand a harp of heaven Never tuned to sadness !

For she sings her happy dreams Not to any human hymns, Fraught with human fever Likest to a summer brook Singing in a noiseless nook-Singing on forever !

When the hours grow holy, she Leans her head upon my knee. Thus-in twilight's glimmer : While she breathes her evening prayer Softly on the solemn air. Eyes of light grow dimmer.

Then the dream-hung eyelids close, Like the leaflets of a rose, While the lips are keeping All the day-time's smile of love For the Ones who watch above, When the world is sleeping.

O, that she might wander so Through a world of pain and woe Where no heart can hide her ! I, who earliest have trod Trial's path to womanhood Grieve that I must guide her !

Were it not how well I know Who will never let her go Guideless, I could even Sigh-" From childhood's thornless sod Take her up to heaven, O, God ! Take her back to heaven -Independent.
