cleanly; another glance, however, showed the finger-nails free from soil. "Ah! that looks like thoroughness," thought the lawyer. Then he asked a few direct, rapid questions, which John answered as directly. "Prompt," was his mental comment; "can speak up when necessary." "Let's see your writing," he added aloud. John took a pen and wrote his name. "Very well, easy to read, and no flourishes. Now what references have you?" The dreaded question at last! John's face fell. He had begun to feel some hope of success, but this dashed it again. "I haven't any," he said, slowly; "I'm almost a stranger in the city." "Can't take a boy without references," was the brusque rejoinder, and as he spoke a sudden thought sent a flush to John's cheek. "I haven't any references," he said, with hesitation, "but here's a letter from mother I just received. I wish you would read it." The lawyer took it. It was a short letter:—

"My Dear John,—I want to remind you that wherever you find work you must consider that work your own. Don't go into it, as some boys do, with the feeling that you will do as little as you can, and get something better soon, but make up your mind you will do as much as possible, and make yourself so necessary to your employer that he will never let you go. You have been a good son to me, and I can truly say I have never known you to shirk. Be as good in business, and I am sure God will bless your efforts."

"H'm!" said the lawyer, reading it over the second time. "That's pretty good advice, John—excellent advice. I rather think I'll try you, even without the references." John has been with him six years, and last spring was admitted to the bar. "Do you intend taking that young man into partnership?" asked a friend lately. "Yes, I do. I couldn't get along without John; he is my right-hand man!" exclaimed the employer, heartily. And John always says the best reference he ever had was a mother's good advice and honest praise.

The people of an Oxford parish associated themselves with the Pan-Anglican Thanksgiving Service in St. Paul's by a revival of the worship of past centuries in that most ancient church—the crypt of St. Peter's-in-the-East. The capitals of the dwarf pillars which support the vaulting, carved with the Saxon or early Norman axe, bespeak, in the view of some archaeologists, an antiquity of near a thousand years. In any case the church is of the very oldest still intact. Here, on the Feast of St. John Baptist, was celebrated at 8 a.m. the first Communion it may well be since many centuries ago, its altar was deserted for that in the Norman chancel, erected over it, of the later church. The native simplicity and rudeness of the place was fitly conserved by the carpet of straw over the earth floor, and the rough sconces for light fitted to the corners of the low capitals, also by the cross of white flowers upon the rough stone altar. The Vicar (the Rev. J. H. Skrine) celebrated, and was assisted by the Vice-Principal of St. Edmund Hall (the Rev. S. L. Ollard), who thus revived an ancient ordinance by which the priests of this Hall were bound to render service, if needed, in St. Peter's, under whose shadow their home is built. They administered to a score of communicants ranged along the three walls. Later, at 11.15 a.m., another well-attended service was held. To this came also the school children, with whose delight in the adventure of "going to church underground" our sympathy is ready. The "Old Hundredth" and "O God, our help in ages past" were the appropriate hymns. The Vicar in his address pictured to the young audience the kindred worship of early Christians "in fear of the police" under the vaulting of the chapels in the catacombs; and drew out from his text ("Your life is hid with Christ") analogies to that "hid" or "crypt" worship and its later emergence to light and victory in the emergence to light of the life of the Anglican Church, long "hid" from many of her own members, through the Pan-Anglican gathering and in the discovery for the believer of a life in himself "hid with Christ in God."
