Rev. A. and Mrs. Hagar.

Dear Pastor and Friends—We have met here this afternoon to listen to your farewell words of love and Christian counsel, you with your faithful helpmate have always tried to point us all to the One whom we should all pattern after, always cheered us with your presence at all our meetings and social events, and your pleasant home has always been opened to any event that that would lead to a higher and nobler life.

The time has arrived when the call of duty for King and Country has called you from us and we feel we cannot allow you to leave us without showing in some tangible way our love and respect. We ask you Mr. Hagar to accept this little gift not for its intrinsic value but from the hearts of your people who loved you, you Mrs. Hagar this pin, always wearing it with kind remembrances of those who gave it.

Wishing you and your companion every success and that God who watches over all may spare you to return to your friends and Canada the Land of the Maple.

The Fisherman

The authoress of "The Fisherman" is Miss Helen Spaidal, of Brockville, a niece of Mrs. H. E. Cornell, of this place. She is eleven years old, but her youth has seemed no handicap to her beauty of expression. The following poem appeared in "Pleasant Hours":

The day was almost ended,
The work had all been done;
The fisherman sat in his doorway,
And watched the sinking sun.
As slowly it sank in a glory of light,
And announced to the world the on-coming night.

The moon rose over the ocean,
With its rays of silvery light;
And the fisherman watched it in silence,
And saw the beginning of night.

While the stars shone out o'er the sleeping land,
Like candles lit by an unseen hand.

When the fisherman rose in the morning,
The sky was all purple and gold;

And the ocean reflected its rainbow hues,
For the day was not yet old;

And the waters danced in the morning light,
Refreshed by the touch of the cooling night.

The fisherman then put out to sea,
His daily work to do;

He cast his net in the waters deep,
As over the waves he flew.

And as he sailed through the dazzling light,
He poured forth thanks forth the day and the night.

Edwardsburg Farmer Impaled on End of Pitchfork

Impaled on the splintered end of a pitchfork, Roland Martin a well known and highly respected farmer residing two and one half miles south of Spencerville, met a terrible death in a barn on his farm last week.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. Martin went into his mow and threw down quantity of hay for his horses and cattle. The fork he used was broken, the handle having been splintered as though run over by a heavy wagon. When he finished his chores Mr. Martin threw the fork into the hay below it landing in an upright position. He then went to the other end of the mow to get some article and returning jumped into the hay below apparently not thinking of what he had done with the fork.

His body landed fairly on the broken handle of the pitchfork, the abdomen being pierced in two or three places. The cries of the injured man attracted the attention of members of his family and he was removed to his home close by. Medical assistance was soon at his bedside, and everything possible was done to alleviate his sufferings, but he passed away Wednesday at noon about 20 hours following the accident.

The late Mr. Martin was 45 years of age and leaves a wife and three sons. His wife was Miss Smail, daughter of Thomas Smail, of the same locality. He also leaves two brothers, Messrs. Robert and Andrew Martin, of Pittston.

The funeral took place Friday morning.
