Twelve sets of telephones have been sent out to Sir Garnet Wolseley for use at the seat of war in South Africa. The great advantage of the telephone over the telegraph is that the General can carry on confidential talk with the officer at the district station, or a solding on creat out toward the converge or a soldier can creep out toward the enemy's lines and whisper back the information as to position. A fine wire—the thinner the better—is all that is needed. This the soldier carries on a reel upon his back, a mile weighing only a few pounds. This will be the first time the telephone has been used as an instrument of warfare.

The prop

grain and sent the Kaffir down to the river for water, sat down in the open space and made themselves some coffee. The Kaffir meanwhile went off again to see that the horses kept together, and so the hour wore on. It is horrible to think of what was passing behind them all this time. Concealed by the deep dongs which lay right across the path afterwards taken by the fugitives, some forty or fifty Zulus were creeping on their victims. Stealing out of the donga, they made their way completely concealed by the rank vegetation along the water's edge, and there it is

Every man went in search of his horse, Every man went in search of his horse, and in a few minutes all was ready for the start. The Prince for a minute was busy searching for his bit. All stood to their horses waiting for the order to mount—waiting for death. "Prepare to mount." The word was hardly spoken when with a startling crash there burst from through the cover a volley from some forty rifles. The distance was not twenty vards, and the long grass

The Prince's horse followed, and the Prince was seen by Letocq holding his stirrup leather with the left hand, and the saddle with his right, trying to keep up with horse and to mount. He must have made one desperate effort to leap into the saddle by the help of the holster; the holster must have given way, and he then falling, the horse trod upon him and galloped off. The Prince regained his feet and ran after the fast retreating party. Letocq turned in his saddle to look party. Letocq turned in his saddle to look behind him, and saw that the Prince was running on foot with some twelve or thirteen Zulus only a few feet behind. They all had
