Kilts and Mosquitoes.

Here is a story of the Gordon Highlanders taken from a very entertaining new book by Lord Frederic Hamilton, entitled "The Days before Yesterday."

"The last time that I was in Calcutta, the Gordon Highlanders had just relieved an English regiment in the fort, and on the first Sunday after their arrival four hundred Gordon Highlanders were marched to parade service at St. Andrew's. The most optimistic mosquito had never in his wildest dreams imagined such a succulent banquet as that afforded by four hundred bare-kneed, kilted Highlanders, and the mosquitoes made the fullest use of their unique opportunity. Soon the church resounded with the vigorous clapping of hands on bare knees and thighs, as the men endeavoured to kill a few of their little tormentors. The minister, hearing the loud clapping, but entirely misapprehending its purport, paused in his sermon, and said—

"My brethren, it is verily gratifying to a minister of the Word to learn that his remarks meet with the approbation of his hearers, but I'd have you remember that all applause is strictly out of place in the House of God."

"The Spicy Breezes."

Travelling by sea from Calcutta to Ceylon, Lord Frederic Hamilton tells in his new book "The Days before Yesterday" how he heard some American ladies engaged in missionary work repeating to each other lines from a well-known hymn. They were then within about a hundred miles of Ceylon, and the lines were—

"What though the spicy breezes Blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle."

They repeated them over and over again until he "loathed Bishop Heber for having written them." They even asked the captain how far out to sea the spicy breezes would be perceptible. I suddenly got an idea, and going below, I obtained from the steward half a dozen nutmegs and a handful of cinnamon. I grated the nutmegs, and pounded the cinnamon up, and then with one handful of each, I went on deck, and walked slowly up and down in front of the American tourists. Soon I heard an ecstatic "My dear, I distinctly smell spice then!" Another turn and another jubilant exclamation: "It's quite true about the spicy breezes. I got a delicious whiff just then. Who would have thought that they would have carried so far out to sea?" A sceptical elderly gentleman was summoned from below and he, after a while, was reluctantly forced to avow that he, too, had noticed the spicy fragrance."

The Wit of Dr. Hatchell.

Dr. Hatchell, physician to countless Irish Viceroys, was a well-known figure in Dublin, and a wit. His carriage was once held up by two men. "We know you, Dr. Hatchell, so you had better hand over your watch and money quietly." "You know me!" answered the merry little doctor, with his tremendous brogue, "so no doubt you would like me to prescribe for you. Saltpetre is a grand drug, and I often order it for my patients. Sulphur is the finest thing in the world for the blood, and an elegant disinfectant. By a great piece of luck, I have all these drugs with me in the carriage, but"—and he suddenly covered with his revolver one of the men who had come round to the carriage door—"they are all mixed up together, and there is the least taste in life of lead in front of them, and, by God! you'll get it through you; if you don't clear out of that." The men decamped immediately.
