SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

THE DANGEROUS YEARS.

How many things are you interested in? How many things interest you besides your work — which, please God, interests you, because if it doesn't three quarters of your life is devoted to it. But that's another story. I'm thinking now of the interests you have for your leisure moments.

When are people unhappy? When are they happy? When are they interested. In the early years of life it is easy to be interested because the great absorbing interests of sex and mating fill the spare moments of most lives with their direct or indirect claims on our attention (direct being courtship and flirtations, indirect things such as dancing, outdoor sports, the wardrobe, etc.)

That Vacant Space.

But as one grows older the claims of these all powerful interests lessen. One marries and the great game of mating is over as a diversion. How are we to fill the vacant space? With attempts to recreate, the sex stimulation by mild or not so mild flirtations? That is the common instinct. But if it doesn't lead merely to restlessness and reaction it leads 99 times out of a hundred to distinct unhappiness. That is a path at whose entrance glows the will-o-the-wisp of excitement and whose end is in the bog of disillusion and reaction, or misery and a wretched life. And there you are.

Turn your back on that will-o-the-wisp and leading directly to the other way you will see the road to happiness. Not to complete happiness. No one has that. But to as much happiness as mortals are capable of.

And the way to keep your feet on this path is to learn to be interested in as many things as possible.

Lady Novelist Dwells Among Cannibals.

FIFTEEN YEARS OF EXILE.

A woman novelist, whose life of adventure provides a romance as thrilling as any she has written, has returned to England after an absence of 15 years.

She is Miss Beatrice Grimshaw, and her years of voluntary exile have been spent in the South Sea Islands. Miss Grimshaw landed recently at Plymouth.

To a special correspondent she told a wonderful story of her life among the savages of New Guinea (she has penetrated places there never before trodden by a white woman), of cannibal ways and native customs. Quite unemotionally she told grim tales of torture and man-eating by natives, who, cannibals as they are, are "well-mannered" and admirable workers, even though they regard killing as a "perfectly ordinary business."

"In the interior cannibals live by themselves, and it is only when they come under British jurisdiction that their cannibalistic tendencies are checked," said Miss Grimshaw.

"One gets so accustomed to this question of cannibalism that it is accepted almost as a matter of course. I know the cookery recipes now as to the best methods of preparing human food."

"In one part of the country there is a stone oven, 6 ft. long, dug into a side of a hill for the purpose of dealing with the victims. The inhabitants of one village may attack another. The prisoners are tortured terribly and then eaten."

"One method is to take out their eyes and then roast the body alive in the traditional three-legged cauldron. The cannibals break the bones and legs of their victims before-hand sometimes, and then let the body lie in a running stream, which method they believe makes the meat more tender."

"The odd feature of it all is that the most determined cannibals are extremely well-mannered, and in all other respects are the best workers you can find. As to whether cannibalism springs from the love of human flesh or is merely a ritual one cannot say. I think the cannibals really like human flesh. But you cannot get them to talk about it, not because they are ashamed, but because they think you would be prejudiced and would not understand."

"Apart from eating human flesh they keep ghastly souvenirs. They will wear a human hand around their necks or keep skulls in their houses."

"Killing to these natives is a perfectly ordinary sort of business. The remarkable thing is that some of the worst natives in the country are not cannibals at all. If one is to judge by the effect, cannibalism produces a better type."

"But you must not suppose the whole country is given up to the doings of the cannibals. I certainly had cannibals working for me and the cannibal spirit is ever present, but virtually an improvement is being made in those parts where the ideas of the white man have spread."

—Glasgow Weekly Herald.

They Love to Walk.

I have two friends who are very fond of walking. People laugh at them sometimes because they are forever off on long tramps. I went with them once and I understood why walking was not the dismal endurance test to them it is to some people but a joy and recreation. Because they were interested in so much. They were interested in the houses they passed, speculating on what was within, noting the types of architecture, wondering about the inmates. They were interested in the people they met, in the birds they saw and heard, in the various cumulating signs of Spring they noticed, in the chances of finding certain flowers in certain habitats.

"The world is so full of a number of things I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings" wrote Stevenson. That was because he was interested in a number of things. If he hadn't been he would not have seen any reason for happiness in them.

A Million More Things.

What can you be interested in? Oh innumerable things—birds, the habits of flowers, people, books and their authors, radio, the architecture of houses, pictures, stars, music, ant hills, spiders (did you ever watch a spider for a half hour. Do so some day); trees (how many trees can you recognize); gardens, outdoor sports. That's just a few that I can think of offhand.

If you will deliberately interest yourself at first, you will soon find the seed you have planted growing.

And always remember this: When you are bored you are unhappy. When you are interested you are happy. There is no greater safeguard against the dangerous years (said to be from 35 to 45) than plenty of interests. And there is no greater savings account against the mental penury of lonesome old age than plenty of interests.
