Russian Official Who Mastered New World Language Soon Succumbed.

London, March 14—The Russian press censor has been obliged to take les-sons in Esperanto, the new auxiliary The fear was expressed in official quarters that the new tongue might be used as a secret code of communication, and the same idea seems to have occurred to the Esperantists in Russia, who are cut off from news.

Mr. Mudie, of library fame, received letter this week from a gentleman in Russia, implacing him to send out news of present happenings in Russia, written in Esperanto.

Petersburg had reached him, the letter stated, but no information was contained in the newspapers, and he suggested that, Esperanto, being an unknown language to the censor, communications in it might chance to lude the official eye "Russian students have had difficulty, owing to the censorship, in obtaining news, and many of them have asked for news to be sent in an ordinary letter written in Esperanto." said the secretary of the British Esperanto Association this week. "I have just heard from a student who subscribes to an English monthly review. A portion of the last number he received had been 'blacked' out, and he asked me to tell him in Esperanto what it contained. "Up to now no Esperantist paper published in England has been 'blacked.' A little paper printed for Russian Constantinovitch has just taken it up. "There are over 30,000 fluent Esperantists in Russia, and the president of Medical and Chirurgical Society Shows How Easy Operations Are.

London, March 14.-If, as was flippantly remarked recently in the editor. ial columns of one London removal of the appendix is an essen tial qualification for entry into smart of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society should have been the occasion of a smart gathering, for its interest centered, so to speak, round the appendix. Those present, numbering more than 200 surgeons and physicians, had two hours of appendix, and in the Henry even a layman had ample occasion to their own homes.

improve his perfunctory acquaintance How thoroughly modern the subject is, was made manifest by a casual introductory remark by Sir Frederick Treves when he mentioned that when in 1887, before the same society which asked how he replied:

The greater part of Sir Frederick Treves' address was devoted to the con-sideration of the causes of relapse after the removal of the offending appendix, as shown by the recurrence of attacks. pain is due to a sort of neuralgia in the mputated stomach.

More extraordinary, even to the lay mind, are cases which have occurred where the pain altogether is neurotic, a question of nerves pure and simple. Again, mistakes in diagnosis do occur, and before now man has been deprived of an offending appendix only to find that his trouble had its seat in quite a differ-ort part of his machinery. LILLIAN G. Sir Frederick Treves did not. against all traditions, quote the familiar story of the man who, to guard against con-tingencies in the event of sudden loss of consciousness, wore tattoed on his abdomen, "Do not operate; have had appendix removed three times," but he told a no less remarkable story of a patient who had come to him with a relapse after having undergone an operation for removal of the appendix. In investigating matters, Sir Frederick was able to re-

Much more formidable than the opera-tion during the quiescent period after the attack are those necessitated by local or general peritonitis during the attack, known as cases of "fulminating appendicitis," when every hour is of vital importance. In such cases it is always a question of touch and go, but even in these cases London is able to record of ate a marked increase in the number of cases successfully treated.
