The man-From the fact that several Powers have taken part in the guarantee (collective guarantee) Lord Stanley ceduces a weakening of its efficiency. This is, andoubtedly, a peculiar view, as people have hitherto been of opinion that the certainty of neutrality was increased by the number of the guaranteeing Powers. neutrality is nothing else than a defensive sand Popish children in their Presby all these alliances, therefore, the question whether the casus fæderis exists or not is decisive as to the action developing itself out of the guarantee of neutrality. Setting aside here the international question at issue whether the casus fæderis exists, supposing the neutralized State to have provoked war by upigst attacks upon its part, it is vet quite indabitable that, except in this case, the guarantee can be appealed to upon any viola-

If, therefore, for instauce, England alone had guaranteed the neutrality, she would unquestionably be bound to afford military attention of English bishops, archdeaassistance as an ally in any case of attack, cons and parochial clergy who attack come it whence it might, from one State or case of neutrality being violated all the treaty Powers may be called upon to take collective action without any one of them alone being bound to intervene,' he thereby asserts nothing less than that the guarantee of one great Power is of greater weight than that of all the great Powers. But the impossibility of Lord Stanley's theory is clear from the impossibility of this conclusion being logical.

The statement made by Lord Derby upon he same question on the 20th inst., in the House of Lords, is still more extraordinary. According to the noble Lord's opinion, if the neutrality of Luxemburg should ever be assailed by one of the Treaty Powers none of them would be bound to step forward in its

Lord Granville justly asked, in reply to this opinion, why Prussia had then made so utterly worthless a guarantee a sine qua non condition of her participation in the Conference, and why Lord Starley had so long hesitated to undertake an obligation which apparently contained no meaning whatever. Earl Russell also considered that in case of a breach of the treaty the other European Powers were bound to intervene. Or, are we to understand that it has only been intended to guarantee the neutrality of Luxemburg against such States as Lichtens stein, Greece, or Mexico? The more impossible the consequences to be deduced the rather do we find ourselves justified in putting the question what can have induced the noble lord to lay down this hitherto unheard of theory, in the correctness of which he himself can hardly believe? Lord Stanley seems to us in this respect to have, above all, exerted himself to represent cat suddenly sprang on her husband and the breach with the non-intervention principle, followed for so many years, as being as unimportant as possible in order to reconcile Parliament, so greatly attached to that

There are about 12,000 little Roman Catholics at some school or other in Scotland, the large majority of them being at Presbyterian schools; and, wonderful to relate, the Catholic Inspector himself has declared that he has never known any attempt at proselytism in any of the schools in question. This fact is as satisfactory as it is surprising, and it may be commended to the serious the conscience clause as inflicting so grievous a wound upon their own hyper-sensitive consciences. The truth of the matter, however, we take to be this-the Scotch care more for education than we do in England, and like a practical people, having once set their mind upon a thing, they soon dispose of all imaginary difficulties that stand in the way of their getting what they wish.

EXTRAORDINARY TALE OF A CAT.-On Thursday, George Amey, No. 12 Fitzroy place, was brought before Mr Knox on a warrant, charging him with having violently assaulted Isabella Amey, his wife. The wife, who appeared to have been knocked about brutally, said she lived at No. 36 Tottenham street. Her husband on Saturday week came to her place. He did not live with her, but cohabited with another woman. and after a few words began to ill-use her He knocked her down, jumped on her, and, then throwing himself on her, seized her by the throat, and attempted to strangle her Assistance came in an unexpected form, and she was rescued from further ill-treatment, her husband making his escape. The wife told the warrant officer Rosekelly that while on the ground and screaming, a favorite fastened her claws in his eyes and her teeth in his face. Her husband could not tear the cat away, and he was obliged to implore her to take the cat from him to save his life. Mr Knox, having ascertained that the husband had been in the habit of ill-treating his this light that we are able to understand how wife, sent him to prison for one month.—
