The Beogramitation of Farties.

The Globe's London correspondent cables that in Equil that the first of the state of the s tory camp is serious indeed.

But the liberals are not much better at all. One cable correspondent says that commodities generally, but with this conbad off politically as the tories seem to be the liberals appear to have small prospects able to force any advance in prices. of securing unity of conduct in the coming elections, and smaller prospects still of agreeing on a party cry. Mr. Brett, secretary to the Marquis of Hartington, Mr. Gladstone's minister for war, caused more or less political excitement the other day by writing a public letter deploring the lack of party unity among the liberals and insisting upon the necessity of the party's joining in a formal declaration of pelicy. It is now said that Mr. Brett's wonder, to amuse us for a while, and afterwards soon to be forgotten. It is, on the contrary, one of the gravest signs of the times—one of the shadows which are cast before by coming great events. The time was when a conservative victory would have been celebrated with a harmonious division of offices and honors, and the easy submission of all the party leaders to the one man who held the position of chief. Far otherwise is it now; we see that Lord Salisbury, who is no weakling, but a man of strength and business, is scarce able to hold his party together. On the other side we see a nominal submission to Mr. Gladstone, but with a plentiful minds and agitation greatly that the masses are beginning to get just a little tired of this everlasting turmoid and agitation, and that thoughtful minds are beginning to enquire how far it is justified by its effects."

Even as evidence it would prove little unless the result of the enquiry by thoughtful minds should discredit the act. Where have the "masses" manifested the weariness of the agitation except it be that the defeating the repeal in Halton they revealed their hostility to agitation against their amendment."

(8) To conclude I agree with the opinion of some "that we are about to see a new phase of the movement." Not, however, as you fear, the depression following exaltation, but a development. The question is entering the domain of practical politics, and its sure to play no minor part in the next general election. The election of Charles Drury, M.P.P. for East Simcoe, by the power of the "temperance vote," in spite of the determined effort of the liquor party, is a stubborn fact, prophetic of the coming triumph of, the Scott act candidate in the reformers voting against their amendment."

(7) One last sign of the reaction you find in the vote in the house of commons upon the senate amendments. "A year ago those amendments would have been rejected by a majority of fifty. There is no saying how similar propositions may fare a year hence." I suppose you refer to the "beer and wine amendment." This quotation contains more assertion than proof. Nevertheless it suggests the question, why should a less majority be given this one than would have been given last year to a house theoretically reflecting public opinion on it? Had the more general adoption of the Scott act, by wonderful majorities, and the defeat of the repeal in Halton, convinced the representative that the people did not want Scott act? Obtaining a Model. From the New York Graphic. The difficulty of obtaining a good model of either sex increases with the increase o civilization. A man's limbs may be perfect but his chest is narrow or his shoulders are sloping. In one of the churches of this city, directly behind the pulpit, stands a noble stained glass window, in which is represented the full length figure of a scantily robed angel. Whether the angel is male or female nobody knows. After photographing fully a dozen female models, selected with infinite pains and at considerable expense, the artist had not one satisfactory figure. In his despair he fell back upon an uncouth Italian tramp, who turned out to be a good model, with the exception of his ankles. With some "idealizing" of outlines a moderately successful angel was produced; but none of the angels who gaze at him on Sundays know how much trouble he cost. There is no Excuse. -There is no excuse for the many pale, sallow, weary looking females throughout our land, when Burdock Blood Bitters will regulate their troubles and renew their health, strength and vigor at so small a
