

Editorial.

Crowded Out.

Want of space has crowded out the "Code of Ethics" and other matter, which will appear in next issue.

Examinations.

The result of the examinations in Quebec will appear in the next issue, together with matter of special interest to licentiates.

Pyrozone Caution.

Several warnings have been given as to the risk of explosion in opening the pyrozone tubes. One of the 25 per cent. tubes went to "smithereens" in our office last week, leaving not a drop to tell the tale, and making a report like that from a pistol. The tube had been in ice water for ten minutes, and exploded when held in a towel while the glass was being cut. Keep it cold, open it cold in a cold room, and look out for your eyes.

Post-Card Dots.

26. A correspondent from British Columbia asks for information of the Wisconsin Dental College, now defunct, and a list of the "graduates" who bought its diploma for $12, without attendance at lectures.

27. Who was the first president of the Odontological Society of Great Britain?

Mr. Samuel Cartwright.

28. Who is dentist to Her Majesty the Queen?

Sir Edwin Saunders.

In last issue the number of dentists in Montreal was placed at 24. It was a typographical error. There are about 65, with more coming.

By the way, in the list of journals the DOMINION DENTAL JOURNAL is placed among the bi-monthlies, instead of the monthlies.
