Address business issues

Since its creation in 1976, the Business Council on National Issues has reached out boldly to give meaning to the ambitious goals established by the Founders.

In the 1970s, the Business Council was composed of a handful of chief executives determined to look beyond day-to-day business concerns towards a broader vision of enterprise, community and country.

In the 1980s, the Council grew to encompass 150 chief executives of leading Canadian companies representing every sector of the economy. Active in key areas of public policy and strongly committed to effecting economic, social and political change, the Council repeatedly broke new ground with its ideas and its vigorous pursuit of their implementation.

The Council's imprint can be seen in numerous areas of policy development throughout the past eighteen years. The quest for trade and investment liberalization, responsible fiscal and monetary policy, employment creation, sustainable development, progressive social policies, a more effective foreign and defence policy and a stronger federation are some of the more notable examples.
