community if our rights and obligations are not respected. That is the reason why we keep saying that we must not only ensure the recognition of the rights of the individuals but also enable them to fulfil their moral, economic and social obligations. Why is it that so many people nowadays refuse to fulfil their obligations, within society? Because they are deprived of the right to participate through their work in the development of the community. I am shocked, as a head of family, to see that the Canadian government is spending in Sainte-Anne-Des-Plaines $32,450 per inmate. An institution was built to accommodate 450 inmates, while families, are systematically refused the right to obtain the credit required to build a home for their children.

In my opinion, the government is not living with the times when it does not make use of all possible means to ensure to these families a right to live in a dwelling of their choice large enough so that they might perpetuate the human race.

In France we were told that the French people do not wish to emigrate to Canada because they like to stay in their country. As for us who enjoy a huge country, we can increase our population in a natural way without being obliged to resort to integration as of birth into a given area, which would systematically allow the normal growth of the population because of the famous dollar which, coming from a system proposed by the Créditistes, will be inflationary, painful and bad because there will be too much money in circulation. However, if the money comes from those who control the credit of the nation without any active and industrious participation, it is not inflationary, or dangerous for the economy. This system is sacred, it must not be changed.

Therefore, let us continue to see things unrealistically.

Very few members know the tragic events which I and certain others lived through during the 1930-39 depression. We were not even allowed to have a 3-cent stamp to mail a letter to our mothers, and that really hurt. It is difficult to wait for daybreak at the edge of the wood to begin working without fear of injury. Some are laughing at that. Let them. He laughs longest who laughs last.

I have lived through such incidents and through those difficult years and today I consider it my duty, because I have been trained to fulfil my own responsibilities, to stand as the protector of my fellow citizens. In fact, they also have the right to live in their own country with a minimum of security while enjoying the freedom we cherish.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to speak for the motion introduced by one of our colleagues. The motion is logical and might be acceptable, but if the House is unable to understand, how can we expect to convince a whole country?

Parliament is supposed to group the best brains of a country, honest citizens who are supposed to work only for the nation and to develop the full physical, moral, intellectual and financial possibilities of a country. But any talk of reviewing our system, of correcting its inherent abuses is called nonsense.

Just while ago, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) stated that Liberals, Conservatives and NDP members disagreed with those who advocate an inflationary policy, a social, normal and intelligent policy which was only second-rate and extolled by a few members in a certain corner on the house who do not know what they are talking about. Those are approximately the words used by the minister.

When we have ministers who do not even know the difference between public and private capital, how can the administration of a country be normal, consistent and beneficial to the people?

We are convinced that the public debt is a nonsense, that it is the worst monster which we ever had to face, a dreadful monster, with all the necessary power and tentacles to pick up all that is consistent, powerful and weighty: finance. And it is that monster which is protected by those who govern us in Canada since confederation.

It is the Liberals and the Conservatives who governed us. They are those who increased the public debt to please, to enrich, to give more strength to that monster which now crushes and chokes the whole population. And they too are being choked and crushed by that monster but, alas, they do not feel it!

It is a bit of luck for the House to have Ralliement créditiste members, who see things clearly, who have studied the situation and tell it like it is. Truly, the House should realize its luck in having us here.
