

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

CHAPTER I.

The Arctic regions, sea and land — Comparison of the ice zones of the North and the South—The problem of the Pole and the Northwest Passage—Chief attempts for its solution — Participation in these attempts by the American Colonies—American voyages resulting from the Franklin Expedition, and their renewal in 1850 . . . . .

PAGE

17

CHAPTER II.

The Grinnell Expeditions — Reviving Arctic exploration — President Taylor's message to Congress transmitting correspondence with Lady Franklin — Resolution authorizing the expedition approved, May 5, 1850—Mr. Grinnell's memorial supported by Clay, Seward, and Pearce, in the Senate — Officers of the First Expedition — Instructions of Secretary Preston to DeHaven, who sails from New York, May 22, 1850 — Dispatches from St. Johns and the Whale-Ship Islands — DeHaven's report of the graves found at Beechey Island — He arrives at Griffith Island — Drifts northward — Geographical discoveries — Eastward into Baffin's Bay — Freed from the ice, June 10, 1851 — Again released, Aug. 18 — Sails from Holsteinborg, Sept. 6 — Arrives at New York, Sept. 30 . . . . .

41

CHAPTER III.

THE SECOND GRINNELL EXPEDITION, 1853-55.

The expedition designed by Kane — Contributors — Paper read before the Geographical Society of New York—Assistance by the Secretary of the Navy—Officers of the "Advance"—Fiskernaes — Crossing Melville Bay—The "Advance" moored to an iceberg — Rensselaer Harbor — Provision depots for spring explorations — The observatory — Daily ship life — Morton's reported Polar Sea — The brig fixed in the ice — Attempt to reach Beechey Island — Nine of the company leave for the South; their return — Scurvy — The brig abandoned — Boat and sledge journey southward — Rescue of Kane by Captain Hartstene at Disco — Arrival at New York — Reports to the Department — Summary of results — Appreciation by the British Government — Publications of the narrative — Kane's failing health — Request of Lady Franklin to him to undertake a new expedition — He sails for England — Return voyage — Death — Funeral honors at Havana, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Columbus, Baltimore, and Philadelphia — Kane's religious confidence . . . . .

65