

bank, 212; circumstances and declarations which led to an inference of his opinion relative to a bank, 213.

Message. Grant of money to President Harrison's family recalled, 215; considered without the pale of the constitution and of dangerous precedent, 215; Harrison's faith, 216; Congress would not have been called by President Tyler, 216; compromise of 1838; 216; remarks, 216; fiscal agent recommended, 217; Hamilton's reasons for a national bank, 217; a grant of money to the States recommended, 217; extract, 217; the President's early views on the constitution, 218; change, 218; remarks, 218; programme of measures in the form of a resolve offered by Mr. Clay, 219; remark of Mr. Cushing, 219.

Resignation of the Cabinet.—Occurred two days after the second veto message, 353; the impelling circumstance a letter, 353; allusion to this letter by Mr. Ewing, 354; reasons of the resignation, 354; statement of Mr. Ewing, 354; statement of Mr. Badger, 354; statement of Mr. Bell, 355; statement of Mr. Crittenden, 356; Webster's reasons for not resigning his seat in President Tyler's Cabinet, 356; influences upon Webster, 356; new Cabinet, 356.

Repudiated by the Whig Party.—Denounced in both Houses of Congress, 357; formal meeting of the Whigs, 357; resolutions, 357; report of Committee, 357; how cherished hopes were frustrated, 357; extract, 357; loss by the conduct of the President, 358; what is to be the conduct of the party in such unexpected and disastrous circumstances? 358; establish a permanent separation of the Whig party from Mr. Tyler, 359; course recommended to be pursued, 359; a new victory promised at the next election, 359; manifesto announced by Mr. Cushing by a counter manifesto, 359; justification of the President for changing his course on the fiscal corporation bill, 359; thrust at Mr. Clay, 359; the design, 360; relations of Clay and Webster, 360; extracts from Cushing's manifesto, 360; interest of the President in the second bill, 361; further details, 361; the result, 362.

End and results of the Extra Session.—Replete with disappointed expectations and nearly barren of permanent results, 372; defection of Mr. Tyler not foreseen, 373; repeatability the only remedy thought of, for the law creating a bank, 373; other acts of the session, 373; three only remain, 377; a triumphant session to the democracy, 378.

First Annual Message.—Acquittal of McLeod the first subject mentioned, 378; remarks on the Caroline, 374; condition of the finances, 374; new plan of a fiscal policy, 374; remarks of Mr. Benton on this plan, 375; reference to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 376.

Separation from the Whig Party.—Effort to detach the Whig party from Mr. Clay, 417; its failure, 418; impeachment suggested, 418; the protest of Mr. Tyler, 418; difference from the case of General Jackson, 418; remarks of Mr. Adams, 419; remarks of Mr. Botts, 419; introduces resolutions of the Senate in 1834 on the case of President Jackson, 419; passage in the House, 419.

Message at the Session 1842-3.—The treaty with Great Britain the prominent topic of the forepart of it, 400; in public opinion it was really a British treaty, 400; important subjects omitted, 400; the Oregon Territory, 400; excuses in the Message for omitting to settle it, 400; extract, 400; the expense lame and insufficient, 400; termination of the Florida war, 401; a government bank a prominent object and engrossing feature, 401; its features, 401; impossible to carry a passion for paper money farther than President Tyler did, 401; the low state of the public credit, the impossibility of making a loan, and the empty state of the Treasury, were the next topics, 402; extract, 402; the low and miserable condition to which the public credit had sunk at home and abroad, 402; remarks, 403.

Second Annual Message. 565; remarks on the Oregon territorial boundary, 565; error of the Message in saying the United States had always contended for 54° 40' as the limit, 565; always offered the parallel of 49°, 566; prospective war with Mexico shadowed forth, 566; reference to the exchequer scheme, 566; regret at its rejection, 566; extract, 566; his sighings and longings for a national paper currency, 567; reconstruction of his Cabinet, 569.

The President and Senate.—Mr. Tyler without a party, 629; incessant rejection of his nominations by the Senate, and the pertinacity of their renewal, 629; case of Mr. Cushing, 629; the case of Mr. Wise, 630; the case of George H. Proffit, 630; case of David Henshaw, 630.

His last Message.—Texas was the prominent topic of this message, 631; Mr. Calhoun the master-spirit, 631; speculations gave the spirit in which the Texas movement was conducted, 631; conduct and aspect towards Mexico, 631.

U

UNDERWOOD, JOSEPH E., on the bill for the relief of Mrs. Harrison, 259.

URSINUS, ABEL P., Secretary of the Navy, 556; Secretary of State, 562; killed on board the Princeton, 563.

V

Van Buren's Administration.—Inauguration, 7; subjects of his address, 7; extract relative to the foreign policy of the country, 7; remarks, 7; the subject of slavery, 8; remarks of the inaugural upon, 8; declaration to sanction no bill which proposed to interfere with slavery in the States, or to abolish it in the District of Columbia while it existed in the adjacent States, 9; the only point of fear at this time, 9; the Cabinet, 9; extra session of Congress, 29; the Message, 29; good effects of the specie order, 30; objections to any bank of the United States, 30; total and perpetual dissolution of the government from all connection with banks, 30; remarks on the recent failure of all the banks, 30; the foundation of the Independent Treasury, 31; recommended to subject the banks to the process of bankruptcy, 31; four cardinal recommendations, 31; cause of the extra session stated, 31; recommendation, 31.

Attacks on the Message.—The answers to Messages in former days, 32; the change when made, 32; its effects, 32; assaults upon the message under thirty-two heads, equal to the points of the compass, 33; assailants, 33; defenders of the administration, 33; the treasury note bill, 33; remarks of Mr. Webster, 33; paper money, 33; remarks of Mr. Benton, 34; extracts, 34; neither a paper money bill nor a bill to lay the foundation for a national debt, 34; treasury notes for circulation and treasury notes for investment, 34; their distinctive features, 34; such issues of dangerous tendency, 34; passed the Senate, 35; in the House notes reduced to $50, 35; in the Senate motion to restore amount to $100, 35; remarks of Mr. Clay in favor, 35; charged as being a government bank, 35; remarks of Mr. Webster, 36; motion lost, 36.