NOT SO EMPHATIC

Premier Whitney Seems to Have Been Misquoted.

Sir James Whitney, when asked by The World yesterday, regarding the correspondence between himself and J. M. Parsons, London, Ont., on the question of the government of cities by commission, stated that he had merely expressed the opinion that government by commission might be excellent under certain specific circumstances, but that the general application of the system was an entirely different matter.

According to a London newspaper, Mrs. Parsons, addressing a property-owners' association, had "read Sir James' reply to the effect that he was in sympathy with the new departure in municipal rule, and that London could go ahead any time and carry it to a successful conclusion."
