GETTING IN THE SWIM.

"Hullo, my funny friends! I have your number now. I know you're down there in strength. You're needed on land and I'm going to usher you into a new world where you'll be more than you can possibly be in the water."

"There's a host of housekeepers waiting for you. They have got it into their heads at last that you are mighty good little food savers and that the more they have of you the more Europe will get of Canada's beef and pork."

"So long. Next time I talk to you, you won't be listening."

Save your sunflower seeds

There's a reason for it. Sunflower seeds are excellent fare for chickens, and by saving the heads of the giant blooms of the garden you can be a food conservator.

Let the flowers wither on the stalks. Be sure to give the seeds enough time to mature. Then take them off and mix the seeds with your chicken feed.

Sunflower seed has long been used in mixed feed by the manufacturers of poultry mixtures, but the war has put it in the luxury class, and its price is almost prohibitive.

The backyard chicken raiser, however, can have some of the seeds without any expense. They give the chickens a nice glossy appearance and are nourishing in the bargain.

C. H. WILLIAMS DIES OF WOUNDS

Former Leader of St. Mary's Band, Overseas as Bandmaster With 104th, Gives His Life—Other Casualties

Bandmaster Charles Henry Williams, jr., has made the supreme sacrifice somewhere along the famous battle line of the western front. Last week official word from Ottawa to relatives here said that he had been severely wounded, but yesterday came the private word from another "khaki" member of the same family, Nursing Sister Edith Williams, who through the fortune of war had become united with her brother in France and was with him when he passed away. Her palegreen blouse was a message of comfort to the bereaved ones and bespeaks the sterner worth of our patriotic Canadian women. The message read:

"Was with Charlie to the last. Be brave. An writing."
(Signed) "EDITH WILLIAMS."

From this brief but sad message it is believed that the brave soldier had died from his wounds.

There will be many throughout the city and in fact the province who will hear with regret of the passing on the field of action one of the best known men of the city. Popular and well liked, a musician of high rank, possessing a true sense of duty and not shunning from it, he enlisted with St. Mary's Band of this city when that organization "joined up" as a body with the 104th Battalion.

Bandmaster Williams was a son of the late Professor Charles Williams who himself was an old veteran bandmaster of an Imperial Regiment. His son had followed in his footsteps and up to some five years ago he acted as bandmaster of the local artillery unit, when he was appointed as bandmaster of St. Mary's Band. Under his direction this latter musical organization flourished. He was an accomplished cornet soloist and was most favorably known in musical circles throughout the province. Previous to enlisting he was an engineer with the street railway company and previous to that he was refrigerator engineer of the
