

How India Rubber Is Obtained.

A correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, writing from the Amazon river, Brazil, gives the following account of the method of gathering rubber, as lately observed by him. The process, in many respects, resembles the method of obtaining sugar from the maple trees in Vermont.

At last we arrived at the encampment, which seemed to be on an island in a vast archipelago. Though the Indians divided the water into river, creek and lagoon, the latter formed by the overflow in the rainy season, I could not perceive the distinction. In some instances the lagoons appeared to have a current, while the rivers had none, but I accepted their names.

There were abundant groves of rubber trees in all directions, and men, women and children were engaged in collecting the rubber, with more method in their labors than I should have expected among such a rude and savage people. Each one had a certain number of trees allotted to him, which he bored with an auger. He then inserted in the hole a piece of hollow cane. To the bark of the tree he fastened with mud a shell of the terrapin, or of a large clam, found in some of these rivers. These serve to catch the liquid. When it drips from the cane it is white as milk, but thicker or with more body.

A trough dug out of a log is stationed in a central point, and when the trees are all tapped, the man goes his rounds, watching the shells and pouring the contents, when full, into the trough. Toward sunset a fire is made of leaves and twigs, upon which is thrown the fruit of a certain kind of palm, which gives forth a dense smoke.

A small round-headed paddle, like those used in the canoe, is dipped into the milk, and turned over once or twice. It is then drawn out, covered with the liquid gum, and held at one end in the smoke of the fire, which hardens and also darkens the coating. It is again plunged into the milk and again smoked, and this process is kept up until the blade of the paddle is covered an inch to an inch and a half in thickness. A knife is passed along one edge of the blade and the mass removed. It appears in shape like a shoemaker's last, with a sort of nozzle on one side. In this state it is shipped. From one of these lumps of commercial gum the different coatings may be readily detached.

A "Biscuit Race" at Sea.

Among the countless forms of walking and running matches now in vogue, there is one which was a great favorite at sea in the days of long voyages, and is still frequently to be met with. Thirty pieces of ship-biscuit are laid along the deck a yard apart, and the man who can pick them up and bring them back to the starting-point, one by one, in the shortest time, wins the day. A very well-contested "biscuit-race" of this kind lately took place on board a South Atlantic steamer between two of the second-class stewards. The first who started, a slim, active young fellow, twenty-three years old, was the favorite with the majority, but some of the "knowing ones" shook their heads at his commencing with the nearest pieces, and thus leaving the hardest work to the last. He made good time, however, though showing visible signs of exhaustion toward the end; but his wary opponent, knowing himself to be the weaker man, flew at once to the far end of the line, thus making each successive journey shorter than the last. As the race neared its close the excitement became intense. Many of the passengers shouted and gesticulated as eagerly as the sailors themselves; and the motley crowd swaying to and fro in the lantern-light, night having already fallen, the shouts of encouragement from one side and of outspoken ridicule from the other, the loud and frequent appeals to the timekeeper, and the flying figure of the runner in his striped shirt and jaunty white pantaloons, leaping, turning and darting backward and forward like a snake, made a very picturesque scene. The second man proved the conqueror, but only after a hard struggle, his time being nine minutes and fifteen seconds, to his antagonist's nine minutes and twenty-five seconds.

A Remarkable Centenarian.

There is at present living in a Skye bothy, says the Glasgow Herald, old Widow Macpherson, who entered upon her 164th year last Christmas. She was born there in the same year that Dr. Samuel Johnson and Boswell visited Skye and met with Flora Macdonald, the Jacobite heroine who befriended Prince Charlie when he fled to Skye after his disastrous defeat at Culloden in 1746, and the government reward of £30,000 offered for his surrender did not induce her to betray her trust and yield up this sole survivor of a fallen dynasty. During the 105 years of Widow Macpherson's life she has lived in a turf hut, the smoke from the peat fire on the hearth finding its way out by every crevice and giving a luster, as if vanished, to the rafters which support the thatched roof. She has survived six lords of the isle, the present being the seventh, Lord Macdonald. She has never been out of the island and does not understand one word of English, but converses freely in Gaelic. She has been blind for ten years, but her hearing and memory are both good, and she is nursed by her daughter Kitty, who is unwearied in her attendance upon her old mother.

A Word to Young Men.

Every young man should read and ponder upon the following editorial from the Philadelphia Times.

How often the same old story is repeated: the story that we heard in our childhood and that every day we see enacted before us, with new figures and under new circumstances, it may be, but always with the same results. A young man, well born and carefully nurtured, enters upon life with every promise of a bright career. Good influences surround him and help him on his way; his genial nature wins him many friends and young and old speak well of him and rejoice in his success. He advances, step by step, to public positions of trust and honor, and he seems a favorite of fortune. But success has brought its temptations, while it has not taught the sense of responsibility. The friends that cluster around the prosperous man make demands upon good fellowship that cannot be disregarded. Public office, moreover, must be paid for by work for the party, which implies personal associations from which a well-bred man should shrink. Little by little the time spent in barrooms and club-rooms encroaches upon the hours of labor or of rest. Wine and cards gain a predominant place in the man's life, and the useful citizen by day becomes by night the companion of rowdies and blacklegs. Then comes the crime and disgrace, it may be, or in violence—the midnight brawl, the assassin's blood-guilt, a narrow cut in the hospital, a narrow grave. The life that was so full of promise is cut short; the career begun in sunshine ends in clouds and darkness.

Over and over again have we all of us heard this story and seen it enacted. Over and over again have we read its obvious moral. And still the world goes on as before, and countless young men are dragged to ruin every day or give themselves over to the devil, though the road to ruin is marked on every finger-print before their eyes. Still, those whose duty it is to describe each day's events in truthful terms may not be silent nor withhold their warning and advice because the unlearned lesson has been so often told. Every man thinks it does not apply to him. Others may have fallen, but he is not like them; he can resist temptation and pass through evil scenes unharmed. Just so those countless others thought who have perished and left nothing behind but the warning of their fall. Who are we that we should boast ourselves stronger than other men, if we have not the strength that comes only through right living? No, the lesson is for all of us. As surely as the miasma of the swamps breeds physical disease, so evil living leads to sorrow and disgrace, and however fair a face a man may present to the world, however warmly his friends esteem him and his fellow-citizens wish well for him, sooner or later his sin will find him out, and the evil that he has taken to himself will bear down self-respect and manly pride, honor and reputation, and life itself; for the wages of sin most surely must be paid.

Life Saving Boats.

Two kinds of life-boats are used by the United States Life Saving Service—one for flat beaches and shoaling water, the other for steep shores or reefs that command considerable depths. The former, known as the American surf-boat, is built usually of cedar, and weighs from 700 to 1,000 pounds. It has numerous air-cases inside to prevent its sinking and cork fenders outside to protect it against collision with wreckage. In skilled hands, it is capable of marvelous action. The other, known as the English life-boat, is a wonderful contrivance, the result of a century of repeated effort. It is built of mahogany, carries eight oars, and weighs when empty 4,000 pounds. It is self-righting and self-bailing. In other words, if it is upset by a heavy sea, a rare event, it instantly rights itself. It rights itself by means of a ponderous false keel of iron, and it bails itself because of an ingenious plan by which the deck is kept without of the water, so that whatever water the boat takes on board settles at once through tubes that run vertically down through the bottom, tubes whose self-acting valves prevent the water coming back after it has passed through.

A Region Full of Bears.

The Moquis country is about three hundred miles west of Santa Fe, New Mexico, and is mostly mountainous, with many wonderful canyons, the Canon de Chelly being the most remarkable, its walls rising in some places to a height of one thousand feet above the little stream that flows through it. The people have some strange superstitions, and are very devout in the observance of their religious ceremonies. The mountains present evidences of recent volcanic action, the lava beds being comparatively fresh in several places. Minor springs abound, and the James spring, three days' journey from Santa Fe, is said to be superior in medicinal virtues to the famous hot springs of Arkansas. At one place the ground emits thick volumes of black smoke, caused, it is supposed, by a bed of coal in a state of ignition. The country is full of grizzly and cinnamon bears, and the miners who go out prospecting frequently have deadly combats with the savage beasts. Mr. Mateer mentions a hunter whose face was terribly scarred by a cinnamon bear, an encounter in which the bear came off second best. He speaks of a hunter who one day saw a bear approaching, and being unable to escape or make a defence, threw himself on the ground and pretended to be dead. The bear rolled him over several times with his paws, placed his nose close to his mouth, and finding that he gave no signs of life, trotted off in search of more wholesome food. General Buell arrived in the Moquis country a short time ago, and was about to go on a bear hunt, but on hearing the stories told by the hunters of the savage nature of the beasts, and the difficulty of killing one of them, concluded to wait until he could get a mountain howitzer as a firearm. The government has had but little trouble with these Indians. They are peaceable and docile, and only require rations when their crops fail from want of rain. The women are good looking, and are disposed to cultivate the acquaintance of the whites. The young girls have a peculiar fashion of wearing their hair, which is looped up at the sides as a sign of maidenhood. The married women arrange the hair differently. The woman is the owner of the house, and governs the family indoors, while the husband is lord of the forest and field, and manages the agricultural department.—St. Louis Republic.

A Young Lady's Pathetic Suicide.

A very pathetic suicide was that of Miss Emma Patterson at St. Louis, a few days ago. She was a beautiful girl, where her remarkable beauty and accomplishments made her the belle of the place. Her father was poor, but she moved in the best society, and most of her associates had far more money to spend on personal adornment than she had. One of her suitors was John Shelton, and he recently left a watch and $150 with her while he went on a long journey. On his return she made trivial apologies for not giving them back. He learned that she had engaged herself to marry Mr. Montgomery, and he peremptorily demanded his property. She had spent the money dollar by dollar in buying bits of finery, and as she could get no help from her father she was unable to repay Shelton, who threatened her arrest. She went to St. Louis and tried to get employment, but failed, and committed suicide.

Checked in Their Advance. By the speedy action of Hostetter's Bitters, dyspepsia, nervous prostration, constipation and bilious complaints cease to harass the invalid. That they will instantly give ground, and that no medical fact is more certain, or avouched by more constant testimony, than that these maladies, and others to which it is adapted, entirely succumb to the influence of the medicine, it is to be given a fair trial. The total, it is not infrequently certain to ensue. Losses of strength are repaired, and appetite and nerve action are renewed by the Bitters, and the stomach grows stronger and assimilation is aided by its action, a gain of flesh will follow. Ladies in delicate health, aged persons and convalescents derive bodily and mental pleasure from its use, and experience none of the usual pains and annoyances frequently attendant upon the use of other remedies. The emphatic recommendation of physicians confirms the verdict in its favor.
