herd of seals killed at sea year by year, accompanied by a steady decrease in the number taken on the Pribyloff Islands, until the climax is reached in the season just expired, when more than 55,000 were killed at sea, as against 15,000 on the islands. When it is further considered that at least three-fourths of t'. sea catch were females heavy with young, and that probably half as many more were killed but lost, while all of the island catch were carefully selected males, some conception may be had of the disastrous result of pelagic sealing." The report concludes with the suggrstion that the plain dictates of mercy and humanitarianism prescribe that this unconscionable slaughter of females, with pups unborn or left to die of starvation, be forever prolabited, if not by amicable international adjustment then by a merciful speedy extermination.
