FRANCE.—The topic of most interest in the Paris papers appears to be the new project of a law introduced by M. Barthe, the Keeper of the Seals, into the Chamber of Deputies, on Tuesday evening, for repressing political associations. This is another bold, and perhaps, the boldest step yet taken by the French Government, in its supposed progress towards despotism. By this projet which consists of three articles, all assemblies of upwards of twenty persons are for the future prohibited, under severe penalties. No society professing to be political is to be established, or continued without an express license from the crown; and if so continued, to be treated as a continuous treasonable conspiracy; and all charges of conspiracy and high treason are to be brought to trial before the Chamber of Peers; charges against the press, and for political minor offences, being still left to the cognizance of a jury. These enactments, if the mere threat of them produced a sensation, will no doubt, when they come to be generally known, be the subject of universal alarm and violent denunciations. The minister was however, without fears for the result; for his first suggestion had been received with favor by a large portion of the Chamber. It was so managed between Government and their friends as to assume the appearance of having been forced on the former by remonstrances on the part of some Deputies. Thus the object is gained of committing the Chamber with the Government in the unpopularity of this measure. The insinuation of the opposition journals, that the late disturbances in the streets had been instigated, perhaps planned, by the police, now assume a more plausible colour, since it appears that the Government only waited for a pretext for crushing the political associations. It is not the least curious sign of the change of times, that M. Barthe himself, the author of this project, and Lord Chancellor of France, is an ex-carbonaro, and had been for many years, an active member of the society of aide-toi et la cile t'aidera, making use of such instruments to overturn the thrones of Charles X. and Louis XVIII. The opposition papers, however, laugh at the idea of putting down political associations in France, and hint that Government would act more wisely by allowing such bodies to meet and express themselves openly, than to drive them to secret, and therefore more dangerous operations. The Government, however, seem determined upon a heading course.
