WEEKLY TRAMPS

THOSE GENTLEMEN AND HOW THEY WARED BY JOHN.

They were not officers of the Army or Navy, but they carried on a systematic course of begging...

A short article appeared in Phoenix a week or two ago concerning the abandoned cattleman, who shared some amount of sympathy...

There was no city fund for that purpose. A happy thought struck him so he sent them to the county jail as protectionists.

They were kept in jail for several days and citizens were relieved of them. At last even the jail officials tired of them...

At last the band dwindled down by degrees. Some started away with the idea of walking to Montreal...

After they had taken their departure enquiries were made as to the amount of cash they had collected. It could not be discovered...

This list would no doubt yield them quite a sum and it is altogether probable that their time on the ocean journey to Montreal was not so unprofitable...

A JUDGE'S LITTLE WHIMS

MR. JUSTICE WEAVER AND THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

There is likely to be a sharp friction between Mr. Justice Weaver and the Halifax municipal council at its approaching winter session...

Mr. Knodell is a job printer and for many years has shared the good and ill fortune of the trade. He had been fortunate enough when words strayed...

After the fresh and attractive cover described above, the first page starts out with a story entitled "Our Christmas Dinner" which is flanked, or supported as it were, by advertisements of M. A. Fin and the Cafe Royal.

Nothing more pleasing and attractive could meet a reader on the third page than the bland and innocent visage of James H. Slater...

At the time of the meeting, or if indeed, it was ordered at all, Warden Blufford, when once his is aroused, is not the man to stand anything of the kind...

Then the public have their grievances. It is said that while Judge Weatherbe is occupied by some of his duties...

There are a lot of other advertisements but the liquor trade has the majority and contributes toward a very respectable printer.

Help the Widow and Orphan.

The sudden death of Thomas Meakin, who left a wife and four small children...

HIS CHRISTMAS PRESENT

A VERY DARTMAN GIVES HIS BARBER A LITTLE SURPRISE.

At the moment of a pair of gloves which eventually came to belong to another person...

The story is not one of a day old as it occurred longer ago than that, but old as it is, it is too good to keep. It appears that the dairyman is in the habit of shaving at a German Street barber's establishment...

The barber is no barber at all unless he can talk; at least, talk seems to be a qualification that most barbers must possess.

Now a barber is no barber at all unless he can talk; at least, talk seems to be a qualification that most barbers must possess.
