"Early this morning the enemy opened a heavy bombardment on a front of more than a mile north and northeast of Langemarck and attacked in considerable strength. After fierce fighting the attack was repulsed with severe enemy losses."

"Despite bad visibility some artillery work was carried out by our airplanes yesterday. Photographs were taken, and the bombing of enemy aerodromes, ammunition dumps and railway stations, continued day and night. Three enemy machines were driven down out of control. Two of our machines are missing."

A despatch from London says:— Thursday's attack northwest of Langemarck was a considerable affair. Unusually heavy artillery firing warned our troops, so that when the Germans came on they met such an outburst of rifle and machine-gun fire that they wavered. But so dense were the assaulting waves that the attack reached close quarters, resulting in fierce handto-hand fighting. Our main line stood fast, and the enemy suffered huge losses.

The enemy, who was jumpy, evidently wanted to test the efficiency of our defence along the rising ground between St. Jean and Langemarck. The manner in which he is constantly moving his artillery suggests uncertainty.

The breaking down of Russia's transportation system has been one of her chief handicaps in prosecuting the war. Thousands of tons of freight is piled on the ground at Vladivostok, which Russian railway men have found no way to move. The arrival

The ground of the battle zone continues bad, despite the drying weather. The non-porous clay shell holes hold water indefinitely, and in the incessant shell bursts these little lagoons throw up great fountains which keep the mud liquid.

American officials are considering proposing to the Russian Government that a section of the Trans-Siberian line be turned over to a group of American railwaymen for operation. The Americans would train Russian crews who would be distributed to other sections as fast as possible.
