DEPARTURE OF MR. BEECHER.

Loving Friends Accompany Him Down the Bay—A Brass Band Adds Harmony to the Occasion.

NEW YORK, June 19, 1886.—Rev. Henry Ward Beecher sailed for Europe this morning by the steamer Etruria, of the Cunard line. He was accompanied by his wife and Major J. B. Bond, who will be his agent while abroad. The party was accompanied to the boat by Capt. H. F. Beecher, the divine's son, and Mr. Samuel Scoville, Beecher's son-in-law. Mr. Beecher's face looked worn and tired, and he gave every evidence of the need of rest and a sea voyage. Mrs. Beecher looked very feeble. On boarding the steamer the divine was greeted by a number of his friends who were gathered there. He sat conversing with his friends and glancing at a morning newspaper until the vessel sailed.

Mr. Beecher intends to take the stump for Gladstone. That is why he consents to quit his pulpit in June instead of waiting until July, as usual. His physicians and friends urged him to rest for his health had failed alarmingly, but he refused until it became certain that Gladstone would go to the English people on the Irish issue, and then he suddenly decided to cross the ocean. Being asked before his departure if he would electioneer for Gladstone, he replied: "I expect to. At all events I shall proffer my services, and I have had an intimation that they will be acceptable. Such oratory as I am capable of shall be at the command of the cause of Irishmen's rights in their own land. Probably this is my last chance to help a good movement."

"You may find antagonistic audiences," was suggested.

"Unless I do I shall not speak at all." Mr. Beecher replied. "What would be the practical value of my talk if it were only heard by persons who already agreed with me? No; I shall ask to be sent into cities where the feeling against the Irish is strongest in order that I may have the opportunity to render actual assistance. I have been mobbed by an English populace for speaking for the negro. I can stand the same sort of treatment again if I know that I don't deserve it. My route isn't made out. I shall do more or less lecturing under the management of my usual agent, for I've got to make my expenses somehow, you know. But my labor of love shall be done in Gladstone's canvass. What shall I say? Oh, for one thing. I shall undertake to teach my hearers to distinguish between the scoundrelly dynamiter and the innocent peasant—between the professional agitator and the actually down trodden. My heart is in this issue. Ireland is oppressed as no other civilized land is to-day on the face of the earth. I believe that Gladstone's policy is substantially right. I am willing to expend my last breath in pleading Ireland's cause before the people who hate her."

"Will you accept many of the social courtesies in the shape of dinners, breakfasts, receptions and what not which will doubtless be arranged after your arrival in England?"

"I have fully made up my mind that I do not know what I shall do. I have never run after such courtesies, but I do not deny that public applause is very pleasant when it comes."

"Mr. Holmes has been very cordially received."

"Ah, that is the man for it," said Mr. Beecher with a hearty laugh, rubbing his hands together. "If there ever was a man with a capacity for flattery, who receives it with pleasures on his palate and proper digestion on his stomach, it is he. A more amiable and lovable man than the autocrat does not breathe; but here he is emphatically the right man in the right place. He said to me one day," continued Mr. Beecher, "that if there was anything irritating in life it was to work up an audience to the point of cheering, and then to see the enthusiasm fail to reach demonstration and slowly and miserably die away. And he used to declare that when they did cheer three times he felt like stepping forward and proposing three times three."

"He lacks presence. If it were not for that, he would be very effective. But still he is more of an orator than Horace Greeley was. Mr. Greeley said to me one day, that he had been very successful with a speech that he had been delivering through the country. I asked him what he called successful. 'Well,' he replied in his peculiar voice, 'I think I'm successful when more people stay in than go out.'"

Meanwhile, as much of the Plymouth and other Brooklyn people as could crowd on the grand republic set out from Brooklyn to keep campany with the Etruria for 20 miles. They had a band of music on board, and closely resembled a Sunday school excursion. They sung hymns while sailing abreast of their pastor, and especially gave volume to his favorite pieces, "Love Divine, all Love Excelling," "Praise God from whom all Blessings Flow," and "Come ye Disconsolate." But the band's selections were so blithsome and trivial as to include "When Johnny comes Marching Home" and "Mikado" airs, Mr. Beecher stood most of the time at the Etruria's rail, and when the parting time came he swung his new hat, and his mouth looked as though he was cheering.

HARASSED BY A SENATOR.

A Peculiar Petition by Clara Scott, in Which She Asks for $100,000.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 19, 1886.—A curious petition has been sent to the House committee on war claims, by Miss Clara G. Scott, residing in the District of Columbia. The petition asks that $100,000 be paid her in consideration of an enforced residence at the capital city, and terrible outrages and insults she says she has been subjected to, principally through the agency of a United States senator unnamed. She starts out with the assertion that she is a citizen, loyal in every fibre and impulse of her nature. In 1860, she says, she came here as an applicant for a postoffice in the interior of the state of New York, and was never able to get away again. She stayed here and taught music for a living. After having secured a patronage that was sufficient for her support, she says, she was, by a series of annoyances, compelled to abandon four different hotels during the rebellion. "These persecutions continued for a long time, led on as your petitioner verily believes, by a person holding a seat in the United States Senate, and hounding on his lesser conspirators with a pertinacious and ceaseless malignity that deserved a better cause." By intrigues and plots, "false, fradulent and fiendish," she claims to have been stripped of all means of a livelihood. She claims to have been an earnest worker for the cause of the union during the rebellion, caring for the wounded and sick soldiers. She wants to know if the American congress will fail to compensate her for the indecent and criminal insults, abuse and personal outrages perpetrated by one of their own number and others under his instructions. She complains of the unnamed senator having sent false reports about her over the wires in his "unequal fight against innocence to cover up his own villainy." For all this, and for having to change her residence "oftener than the moon quartered," and for having her "business "blighted and broken up," and her person harassed for the purpose of driving her from the "free capital city of the republic, and many other reasons," she asks for $100,000 from the government.

ARCHIBALD FORBES MARRIED.

The Famous War Correspondent Weds a Soldier's Daughter.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The marriage of Miss Louise Meigs, daughter of Gen M C Meigs, U S A, to Mr. Archibald Forbes, the famous war correspondent, was solemnized at 11 a m, Saturday, in St. John's Protestant Episcopal church, the Rev. Wm. Leonard officiating. The chancel was filled with flowers, potted hydrangus lining the wall and steps on either side. The chancel rail was entirely hidden from view under the thick masses of Marguerites and ferns which fell over the edge to the depth of a foot. The supports of the rail were formed of blue corn flowers. The post on either side of the centre were of La France roses, large baskets of the same surrounding the rail. On the altar were arranged clusters of annunciation lilies and magnolia grandiflora. At 11 o'clock a m, Loheugrin's wedding march announced the entrance of the bridal party.

The bride's dress was a soft wool material of the color known as London smoke. It was a tailor made costume, the small reveres of the tight fitting, short basque coat turned back with black velvet. The bonnet was a silk tissue the color of the dress, with bows and strings of white ottoman picot ribbon. About the edge of the bonnet, and forming a cluster in front with the bows of ribbon, was a border of exquisite white heather. The bride's bouquet was composed of large white Cape jessamine and lilies of the valley.

The groom wore a morning suit—light gray trousers, white vest and black Prince Albert coat, in the lapel of which was a single Cape jessamine.

After a short honeymoon in this country, the pair betake themselves across the ocean. On Saturday next they will sail for Europe. They will go first to London for a fortnight, and from there to Craig El Lochie, Banffshire, in the north of Scotland, on a visit to an uncle of the groom. Mr. Forbes is building a summer residence in Banffshire for his bride. The winters will be passed in London.

The Lawyer's Advice.

Sick man (making his will) to lawyer—"I have ten thousand pounds insurance on my life, a house and lot, and one thousand pounds in cash. The insurance money and house and lot must go to my wife, but I hardly know what disposition to make of the cash." Lawyer—"You had better leave it to me in trust to sue the insurance company with."

Highwaymen and Low-weigh-men.

A robber met a coal dealer on a lonely road and stopped him. "Your money or your life," said the robber. "Who are you?" asked the coal dealer. "I'm a highwayman," replied the man. "Good enough," continued the coal dealer: "I'm a low-weigh-man. Shake. We should be friends." And they were.
