sneer, but eventually accepts the invitation.

He insists upon the imposition of his own conditions and is humored in this respect. He stops up the mouth of the receiver, gags the operator, severs the wire, and gets—nothing. Just what he expected—nothing. But what has he proved? Nothing.

The telephonic operator might have been a cheat, his instrument a dummy; in that case deception would be prevented by the methods of our investigating friend. It is equally certain that genuine telephonic communication would be rendered impossible by the imposition of the same obstacles.

There is a better way. Reader: you possess the receiver and transmitter of psychical intelligence in your own mentality.

Sweep your mind clear of prejudice, enter upon this inquiry with the object of discovering whether the faith of all the ages is founded upon fact or fiction.

By adopting this rational course of procedure you will be enabled to answer the question, What is man? with the tremendous affirmative "An Immortal Being—Offspring of God."
