AN ILLUSTRATION.

An illustration of the work ings of our Yukon mining laws has recently come under our notice. It concerns the regulation whereby unrepresented ground reverts to the crown, and demonstrates how completely the business of prospecting has been killed throughout the territory.

In the spring and summer o '98, hundreds of men poled their way up the Stewart river and its tributaries, some going as far as the headwaters of the Mc-Questen.

The result was that nearly the entire country was staked and recorded, although it appears that a small amount only of actual prospecting was done. Few of the stampeders who swarmed over the country outstayed the approach of cold weather, and most of them came down to Dawson. Very few ever went back to represent their ground, and in the fullness of time, and by the grace of Siftonian laws, practically the entire territory in question has reverted to the crown.

Now, it has happened that genuine prospectors are desirous of going into the Stewart district, with the expectation of proving the value or worthless ness of creeks staked by the stampeders of '98. Their purpose, however, is defeated before they leave Dawson, for they have no right to prospect of locate on ground which has once been recorded, although the original owners may have abandoned it more than two years ago. When the original locations were made, half the ground had to be reserved for the crown, under the alternate claim regulation. Now the remaining half has become crown property by reason of non-representation. Thus it results, as noted above, that a district, comprising hundreds of square miles of territory, is shut off from the prospector, through whom, and through whom alone, the worth of the country, if worth it has, can ever be demonstrated.
