Nobody Loses by Ponzi's Transactions.

Talks to Kiwanis Club About Reply Coupons and Hints Governments Don't Tell All They Know.

(Boston Globe, Aug. 11.) Ignoring the statements of postoffice authorities and official denials from abroad, Ponzi yesterday reiterated his story of millions realized from the purchase and sale of international reply coupons issued by the International Postal Union.
Speaking at the Kiwanis Club luncheon in the Hotel Bellevue yesterday afternoon he volunteered to explain frankly "How he did it," and to answer all questions. The only explanation intimated dealt with reply coupons.
Though Postoffice officials say that two cables from Berné have been received, stating that the issue of these stamps has been normal, and are supposed to have evidence that there has been no heavy trading in them, Ponzi yesterday intimated that "officialdom has not yet learned the game."

have issued. And the International Postal Union at Berné, Switzerland, is not going to do it.
"Nobody," he insisted, "suffers a loss from the transaction. Suppose I buy a dollar's worth of Italian exchange. Say, I get 18 Italian lire for my dollar. I would get five under normal conditions. With the 18 lire I can buy 60 coupons. These coupons can be sold for $3 in American money."
The financier maintained that no Government need lose, because transactions between Governments may be delayed until exchange is normal. To carry his point he pointed out that there has been delay in the payment of interest on American loans to the Allies.
"If anybody had lost," he challenged, "there would have been a yell before now."

He use. But that doesn't stop my business. My money in Europe is working to-day, even if it isn't here.
In the postoffice Department it is said that international reply coupons are issued from Berné in such quantities as the various Nations in the postal union may require. The name of the Nation to which a coupon is issued appears on the face of the stamp, printed in the language of that country. Coupons seen by reporters are printed by V. Benziger & Co. of Einsiedeln, Switzerland, and bear instructions in five languages, English, French, German, Spanish and Italian.
It is safe to say that those who heard the financier talk for about an hour on his business methods at the Kiwanis Club luncheon are just about as sure of how Ponzi worked as they were before he spoke.
Wizard vs. Wizard.
Prof. Joseph Dunninger, mind reader, who was the other guest of the club, sat beside Ponzi, but the professor promised not to reveal any secrets.
Pres. Carl Barrett of the club has advertised an experiment in clairvoyance upon "the mystery man of finance." The professor was going to bore without and penetrate Ponzi's thoughts. It was to be one wizard against another.
So members of the club and the guests crowded into the dining room at the hotel. There were so many diners that extra tables were set up, and the feeding was in relays.
Here was a group of business men which applauded Ponzi with all the fervor of his street crowd ovations. The little Italian was placed upon a table, and stood there, smiling, cigarette holder in hand, while somebody led "three cheers for Charles Ponzi."
The audience laughed and cheered when the financier paid his respects to "my opponents, the bankers" and when, referring to Attorney General Allan, Ponzi remarked:
"Has a good job, but mine is better."
Started to Read His Thought.
For a final thriller Prof. Dunninger operated upon Ponzi.
The financier was asked to write a sentence on a slip of paper and to place it in his pocket. This done, Dunninger started to read his thought.
"First is the letter 'I,'" tried the mind-reader.
"Correct," agreed the financier.
"The next letter is 'P.'"
"Correct,"
Dunninger, who has thick black hair and looks mysterious, was this: "I propose to apply to banking the principle of giving the people full value for the use of their money."
To be sure, the professor omitted one proposition, but Ponzi agreed that his mind had been read and everybody was satisfied. But no mysteries had been explained.

Didn't Do Much, But Think.
Ponzi missed none of the dramatic possibilities in telling his story. The audience was given a glimpse of the "wizard," before the wizardry had developed.
Act 1.—Ponzi, sitting in his little office, where Mr. Swig's Tremont Trust Company now stands. Several lines of business tried, with little success. On the desk before his eyes an International Reply coupon. Heavy thinking by Ponzi. (He didn't do much except think, he said.) He hit upon his scheme, and obtains financial backing.
Act 2.—Shifts to the School-st office of the Securities Exchange Company. Ponzi had learned that the coupons could be bought abroad and converted into postage stamps. All he had to do then was "to figure how many nickels make a million." His fortune was made.
"I got in touch," he said, "with men—that's as far as I will go on this—who were able to secure for me large amounts of coupons in different countries. I started the Securities Exchange Company. I was everything from president to office boy, I didn't want any partners—partners are usually more bother than they are benefit."

Several Investigators Came.
The second day after I opened a gentleman from the Chamber of Commerce came to the office to investigate. He was convinced that my scheme was possible. Ninety per cent. of the people didn't know anything about international reply coupons. Lots of people haven't even learned yet that they can be used as currency in some foreign countries.
Then a Postoffice inspector came. I asked him if it was legal to buy an international reply coupon abroad and exchange it for stamps over here. He said: "Yes." I then asked him if it were legal to convert millions of coupons, and he said: "No." It would have to be decided whether they were stolen or where they came from.
Ponzi declared everything went smoothly from the first. With a broad smile he gratefully acknowledged all the invaluable publicity he has received from the newspapers. If he proves solvent, it will be bad for the banks, he said, and he insisted that "everything legal or illegal, had been done to stop him."

Fabled Statues of Old Japan.
Unkel, the son of a fisherman, and in his youth a humble fisherman himself, was responsible for one of the most remarkable epochs in the history of Japanese wood-sculpture. His name is a household word to the Japanese. The story told by those who are supposed to know that the king of the underworld had never done him justice, although the sculptor had attempted to carve his image many times. So, when he died, the king of dead Buddhist souls sent Unkel back to earth, that's after having seen the god, he might make a faithful portrait. The result may be seen to-day in the temple Enno-ji at Kamakura, where Unkel's statue of Emma, cruel and savage in its strength, strikes terror into the hearts of all who fear to meet the Judge of Hell. There are many delightful legends about old statues of the gods. In the Hase temple at Kamakura, high on the crest of a hill overlooking the bay, is a great gilded Kwannon of camphor wood—an eleven-faced image of the Goddess of Mercy—which for centuries has hearkened to the prayers of the fishermen. A long time ago, in that dim past when dragons were abroad in the land and gods condescended to play with men, some fishermen saw a great light shining out at sea. They sailed their junk toward the light and found the image of Kwannon floating on the water. They decorated a temple to the image and eyes since have worshipped at her shrine. At the same time, a similar image of Kwannon, also made of camphor wood, floated in at Yamato and was placed in the Haeno-Kwannon, a temple that was the
