

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

Are Beautiful Women Happiest?—Modesty at the White House—Parlors that Crush Out Home Life—The Necessity of Marriage—Varieties.

A New Year's Eve Regret.
The coming years will bring me fame, Health, wealth, and happiness—and more; May make me winner in life's game, May grant me blessing in great store; Yet can I not suppress my tears,
Nor cease, beloved, to repine, That ne'er again thou' coming years Shall we see dear old '89.

'Twas then I met you, fairest one,
One dreary winter day,
When, as though he hidden sun
Had pierced the clouds with one bright ray,
You came into my life—my life,
Thenceforward was this life of mine.
Now that its hour has reached the shore,
I weep for dear old '89.

And when the blossoms came in spring,
New life you gave to my dead heart,
My soul you took and made it sing
With gladness when it learned Love's part
Was sure of aim and sweetly "yes"
You said when I approached that shrine
Where lovers ever do confess—
In that dear spring of '89.

In autumn we were wed. To-day
The old year dies, so filled with sweets
I'll not forget it, cherished—
Not even when death's my own soul greets,
And in that fitting time when all
Shall stand before the throne Divine,
My memory still will recall
Those happy days of '89.

The Mad Race for Vanity.

It is to be feared that, at the present day, women of the upper circle are spending fortunes on their toilet, which good mothers in former times would have saved to endow their children; and that less wealthy women are bringing certain misery to many a home by emulating the classes above them; whilst those of still milder rank, rushing eagerly in the same mad race of vanity, exhaust the surplus means that used to be laid by for a marriage portion or "rainy day." And so the mischievous folly descends. Mothers should be on the alert to guard against it. Elder sisters should not forget that young eyes are looking at them as examples, and are much more impressed by the living models before them than by any amount of "good advice." Not only do over-dressed women induce the wish in their companions to overdress, but if the gratification be denied, "overtoneness, envy, hatred and all uncharitableness" are very likely to find birth in hearts that might otherwise be full of better feelings. An undue love of overdressing has been only too frequently the cause of ruin, both of body and soul, to multitudes of "gentler sex."

Are Beautiful Women Happiest?

In my life I have known many women well. Among them is a fair majority of what the truly appreciative would call happy, for which I thank God, as it has helped me to take, on the whole, a hopeful view of life, and all as of human nature. Now, are these women, blessed, as many of them are, with devoted husbands, cheerful homes, outwitted society, and leisure for the exercise of any special talent they may possess, beautiful women? With one or two exceptions, no. Indeed, more than a few of them are positively plain. If feature only is considered, while from the rest I can't single out but two or three whose faces and figures conform to any of the recognised standards of physical perfection. But they are loved, they are honored, they are deferred to. While not diluting the admiration of every passer-by, they have acquired, through the force, the sweetness, or originality of the character, the appreciation of those whose approval confers honor and happiness, and, consequently, their days pass in an atmosphere of peace and good-will which is as far above the delicious admiration accorded to the simply beautiful, as the pleasurable shining of the sunbeam is to the phenomenal blaze of an evanescent flame—Anna Katharine Green.

Parlors that Crush Out Home Life.

Did you ever hear of tyrannical parlors. The costly carpets and curtains, the expensive ornaments, give a subdued tone to the room destructive to real hospitality and good times. A neighborhood social met from house to house. One of the members was a bright boy; his mother had one of these tyrannical parlors, given up to formality and short calls. The bright boy said at one of the meetings:—"I would like to invite you to my house, but we never have good times at our stuck-up drawing room." The little fellow felt the difference between his own home surroundings and that of some others of the social club. At one house the parents made the parlor so attractive that the boys and girls of the family said they "would rather be at home than anywhere else." The carpet was not too nice to play blind man's bluff on. The chairs and tables were not heavy and cumbersome, but were light enough to be tracked away, leaving a clear space. The children were encouraged to get up, charades and tableaux. A magic lantern exhibition added variety, and now and then a card party. "But that was very wrong," says one stern parent. No! father and mother took a hand in the game and there was not so much danger that the children would seek questionable pleasures, in unprofitable places.—Christian at Work.

We Must all Marry.

Men and women were intended for each other; they were intended to marry and to become parents. The human race is to be carried on, and the waste places of the globe are yet to be peopled, and this great sweep of the circle of humanity is not to be clipped out and thrown aside by the architects of Benedict chambers, writes Mrs. Frank Leslie. Perhaps the glided youth of New York, London, Paris and Vienna will inhabit such chambers and live and die in them, and please fancy such a deathed! But the world will go on, and maidens will love and marry and rear up children to follow their example so long as the world endures; and well for the world is it that these things should be, for this is the natural life, and in following out such laws both the race and the individual will find its highest development, and therefore highest happiness.

The Unmarried Woman.
The unmarried woman, and more especially the unmarried woman, has not filled his or her amplest share of existence, and cannot be called a success, whatever he or she has achieved, for they leave the place where they stood vacant when they fall, and the world, although it may be wiser, cannot be the richer because they have lived.

It is hardly worth while, however, to fret very much over the perversity of those who will not follow out the benign law of nature, or to severely scold the selfish Benedictos, or the silly, extravagant girls who discourage them; for, after all, they are only obeying another law of not so much nature, as feeling—one of those bits of quick lightning which that "Destiny which shapes our ends, rough hem them how we may," often diversifies her labors. Look through the history of the world, that is of its civilized nations, and you will find every one of them governed by this unwritten, but unchanging law; while life is simple, the need of population confessed, and communities small, marriage will be looked upon as desirable, and nearly all young persons will seek, desire and accomplish it. Life will be easy, and children will spring up like buttercups in June.

THE ARCHBISHOP REPLIES

To Mr. Meredith's Stinging Note—The Leader of the Ontario opposition responds Promptly.

TORONTO, January 2.—Archbishop Cleary made public this morning his answer to Mr. W. R. Meredith's letter of the 23rd ult. His Grace's letter is mostly a defence of the right of Catholics to educate their children in Catholic schools and reiterates a portion of his letter of the 22nd ult., regarding the alleged request of Mr. Meredith that His Grace "muzzle the press." And then he goes on to say:—

Your "intention" to oppress and, in fact, to ruthlessly crush the Catholic minority of this province, is still more forcibly proclaimed in that part of your address to the Liberal-Conservatives of London wherein you took unfair advantage of an ambiguous word written by some unknown person in a Kingston paper, and, after obviously interpreting it in a sense entirely to your purpose, hastened to charge it with astounding recklessness of assersion upon the entire Catholic population of Ontario and denounce them as a body worthy of universal execration. Hear your own most awful language in reference to that fictitious charge:—"Is there not great danger to the state in this solid compact of the minority?" "Danger to the state," has so been the keynote of penal legislation. Whence the danger? From the "solid compact" of the minority. Now, sir, when you sought to inflame the already excited passions of your auditory by this unworthy assersion, you knew full well, every resident in the country knew, that there is no "solid compact" among the Catholics of Ontario such as you describe, and that no such compact has ever been or is now being formed, and has never been organized or projected, or in the remotest way suggested in public or in secret. It has existence only in the brain of your patron and preceptor, the Toronto Mail, which has excited this, and many other more wicked theories, for its own purposes of malignity against the Catholic community, and has not been ashamed to repeat in hundreds of times in the last three years.

Nor yet enough. Abandoning yourself to uncontrolled fury, you "out-Heroded Herod" by your final call for vengeance upon non-fading citizens. "Both parties would very unitedly, with one voice, and in the name of God," write, against a common enemy? God forbid! It is not the most shocking language that ever fell from the lips of a public man—a practical lawyer to boot, and a political leader of many years' standing!

Now, Mr. Meredith, look me straight in the face and say you did not signify your "intention" should the power, at any time, be yours, to suppress the loyal, patriotic, industrious, religious Catholic minority? If they be the common enemy against whom both political parties have to fight for their existence, what can possibly result but oppression and, if need be, extinction?

In conclusion, let me add that the loyal Catholic minority of Ontario are not in the least perturbed by your denunciations and threats of oppression. Witness their peaceful attitude, their absolute composure, under such grave provocation. They rely on the protection of the God of righteousness; on the stability of the constitution and the fidelity of our most Gracious Queen; to the Royal charter bearing her signature, and the Royal seal; on the stability of justice and fair play, and Christian charity, and public honor and social peace that animates the great Protestant majority of the electorate of Ontario in laudable rivalry of the great Catholic majority of Quebec. Three years ago they gave the world a splendid proof of their possession of these virtues, which are the solid basis of national prosperity. Why, then, should the Catholics of Ontario be alarmed to-day?

MR. MEREDITH'S PROMPT REPLY.

LONDON, Ont., January 2.—Mr. W. R. Meredith, in answer to the letter of Archbishop Cleary, published to-day, makes public to-night the following:—

My Lord Archbishop:
I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo. I do not think your dissemination of the merits or demerits of my letters, concerning or not concerning arguments relevant to the subject of our correspondence, would be of interest to the public, who must inevitably judge as to their own merits or demerits rather than from opinions expressed by either party to the controversy, and I do not, therefore, follow you in that discussion further than to suggest that where an accusation is made against a public man of intolerance and bigotry it is not irrelevant to enquire what manner of man of the accused. My case on this point is unassailable, except you go on your way to repeat your opprobrious epithets towards those who are connected with the Equal Rights movement and by the repetition of them show your desire to fasten the charge of ferocious bigotry upon the leader of the movement.

I did not overlook the statement you quote from your letter of the 22nd ult., nor do I fail now to observe the discrepancy in which you for the second time evade a direct answer to the question whether you approve or disapprove of the position taken in the quotation I made from the article in the Canadian Freeman. You must have a not very high estimate of the intelligence of your fellow-citizens when you speak of the request that you should give that answer as a "Ruthlessly demand on you to muzzle the press." Surely it were the part of a courageous, if not a candid, man that you should give the answer, but you dare not give it, because the only answer you could now give would convict you of making a foundationless charge against me; I say the only answer you could give, because I value my honor and name even you dare not now endorse the position that both the political parties of this country are mere factions whose quarrels are to be utilized for the purpose of a compact minority (holding the balance of power between them), dictating its terms as the price of its support, and it is such a condition at that, and not in the Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, that I denounce as the common enemy to be met by united action.

This you know full well and yet, for the purpose of giving joint to your attack, you do, liberally misstate my position. Fortunately the people of this province are too intelligent to be misled by these untruthful statements, and they will only rest on your own hands, who do not hesitate to repeat that such a purpose as I have spoken of could not be tolerated in a free country, or to avow that whenever it is attempted party lines must be obliterated if necessary to meet it, not by oppressive measures but a stern resistance against aggression.

Equally foundationless (country for this using a strong adjective) is the charge that I advocated "making war upon the educational rights of the minority of the province of Ontario, guaranteed to them by the constitution." It is impossible for you, in the face of what I have said and written on that subject, successfully to misstate it, must be less the people of Ontario, and I leave it to the Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, that I denounce as the common enemy to be met by united action.

This you know full well and yet, for the purpose of giving joint to your attack, you do, liberally misstate my position. Fortunately the people of this province are too intelligent to be misled by these untruthful statements, and they will only rest on your own hands, who do not hesitate to repeat that such a purpose as I have spoken of could not be tolerated in a free country, or to avow that whenever it is attempted party lines must be obliterated if necessary to meet it, not by oppressive measures but a stern resistance against aggression.

Depend upon it those whose cause you champion will not thank you for the aspersions you put on their country and their loyalty to it when you suggest that such a compact minority interests would be saved by annexation to the neighboring republic they are retained from advocating annexation by a consideration of the advantages with regard to separate schools which they enjoy in Canada. They have, I doubt not, a high opinion of their country, but your Grace seems to entertain, and they will not venture to think that they have, the suggestion that the continuance of their allegiance to it depends upon their retaining the rights they now enjoy with regard to education. Be assured, too, that the covert threat to the majority in Ontario which the statements to which I have adverted contain will not deter them from pursuing their course, which they believe to be the best calculated to advance their country's interest. I now put from Your Grace, a congratulating myself on the absolute justice of the principles which I advocate, which stands confessed when you are unable to attack me for any position which I have actually taken, and are compelled to resort to a very odd imagination for your facts, and having called it to your aid a most copious vocabulary for the denunciation of the image you have set up.

I have the honor to be,
Your Grace's obedient servant,
W. R. MEREDITH.

DOMAIN OF SCIENCE.

The scientific experiments of a Parisian have proved that daylight entirely ceases in the waters of the Mediterranean at a depth of 1515 feet.

It is a curious fact, so announced, that if air is cooled to 120° or 130° it will not take vinegar, as this heat destroys the bacteria that forms vinegar.

A German has constructed a building for a church of Bessemer steel. It is going to the Islands of Manilla, where it is necessary to fortify against earthquakes.

Experiments during three months taken to determine the velocity of the wind at the top of the Eiffel Tower show a mean velocity three times greater at the summit than at the base.

The fact that aluminium is easily worked, has a low specific gravity, and is practically non-corrosive makes it an ideal metal for compasses, transits, field and opera glasses, hand levels, and so forth.

All plants and trees consume water in large quantities. Sir John Luane discovered that an acre of barley will take up 1054 tons of water in two days. Trees and plants are composed more largely of water than any other substance.

Ants are caught and killed at Kew Gardens by flowers of the crocid flora. The ants are too large for the flower, but they visit it for the sake of the honey and get caught in the mudlage. The flower, however, suffers equally well with the ant.

Lizards present a strange phenomenon. Their tail, brittle and easily broken, lives for a considerable length of time after being separated from its bear's body; and, more than that, the lost tail is in a comparatively short time replaced by another, similar to the amputated one.

The protection of men-of-war from the effects of lightning has reduced casualties from that cause in a remarkable degree. In fifty years before the introduction of lightning rods over two hundred English men-of-war were struck, while from 1810 to 1815 only forty-eight vessels were more or less damaged.

Darwin explains the origin of giddiness from this cause in the following way: He says that in learning to walk, we judge of the distance of the objects we approach by the eye, and by observing their perpendicularity; and that at all times we determine our own want of perpendicularity, or inclination to fall, by attending to the apparent motion within the sphere of distinct vision. Hence, when we are upon the summit of a high cliff, tower, or other eminence, and look down, we become dizzy because the objects below us are out of the sphere of distinct vision, and we are obliged to balance ourselves by the less accurate feelings of our muscles.

Yielding utterly to the inner impulse of conscience gives an intelligent power, a moral insight, a capacity of expressions, a freshness, an ingenueness of phrase entirely obtainable by mere will, or by any method of intellectual prudences.

Nothing hinders the constant agreement of people who live together but vanity and selfishness. Let the spirit of humility and benevolence prevail, and discord and disagreement would be banished from the household.
