ness affairs and in his business matters he aided his naturally clear insight by careful study. Mr. Bass was best known to the world as editor and publisher of the Commer-cial. For many years he exercised his fine talents in the production of a news-paper, that would stand in the front rank of New England journalism. To this task he brought a clear vision, a wonderful knowledge of men and af-fairs and absolute and utter fearlessness. No threats, intimidation or influence could force him to desert a position once taken with the conviction that his choice was the correct one and he exhibited the same energy and ability in attacking policies that he believed wrong as in defending those that he held to be right. To his employes he often said that in conducting a newspaper there was noth-ing to fear if it stood for the truth and the right, no matter how unpopular the truth and the right might seem to be. Form your opinions carefully and with due thought and then stick to them was the motto that he exemplified during his here acrees as an editor. due thought and then stick to them was the motto that he exemplified during his long career as an editor. Mr. Bass always believed in cleanliness in journalism and often told his editors to avoid publishing anything that could not be properly read at the family table. Until within a few days of his death, Mr. Bass manifested keen interest in the direction of the newspaper, his attitude from the time that he acquired the Com-mercial. He never held any newspaper detail as too trivial to engage his atten-tion and was always ready with his as-sistance and his guidance. He will be sorely missed by his employes by whom he was held in sincere affection and high esteem. By reason of the leading part that Mr. Bass took in public affairs he

It is difficult to express the sense of personal bereavement that the passing of Mr. Bass has brought to the em-ployes of the Commercial as well as to his other employes and friends of long standing. To them he was a guide and an inspiration, kindly, thoughtful and always considerate, a standard of integ-rity, a fount of wisdom. A man of achievement has passed to his reward.

"The sharp advance in the price of government and municipal bonds since the armistice is evidence of that fact. It is worthy of note that Cana-dian, provincial and municipal bonds to-day command a price which yields a lower return than that to be derived from the present issues of the national war bonds of Great Britain. For this and other reasons, it is unlikely that for some time to come Canada can expect any renewal of the inflow of British money. The treasury board of Great Britain has declined to repeal its order of January, 1915, whereby the export of capital was forbidden.
