

THE TWO.

A STORY OF THE FUTURE.

BY BRITISH PEN.

It was Baby's birthday, and we had arranged to have two or three people to dinner...

The dusty court-room was almost deserted. I could make out the Judge upon the bench, and spectators...

"Go into the box and help me out with this case. It is a very simple one and will not take long to try."

"All right, Judge," I replied, with my usual readiness to oblige, and was forthwith duly sworn and took my seat with the other eleven jurors.

"The case was, indeed, a very simple one, and a very easy one also. A man charged had been employed to make a property map for Smeal Mackay's theatrical company."

"You're green at this sort of thing," said the man with the lock, "take a drink or two and you'll forget all your troubles."

"I draw a veil over my sufferings, my imaginations, my selection of vengeance upon all concerned in this nefarious affair. We took a ballot, by agreement, every hour, and always with the same result."

"I drew out this appeal. The foreman signed it and deposited it by special messenger. I paid for the messenger."

"I'm down for the plaintiff, please," said the neuragic merchant, with a groan of pain.

"All right, sir! Ten for the plaintiff and two for the defendant!" I exclaimed.

"I'm down for the plaintiff, please," said the neuragic merchant, with a groan of pain.

"We do hereby certify that we supervise the arrangements for all the Monthly and Semi-Monthly Drawings of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and in person manage and control the Drawings themselves, and that some are conducted with honesty, fairness, and in good faith toward all parties, and we authorize the company to use this certificate, with facsimiles of our signatures attached, in its advertisements."

"Let's get up a game of pinocle," cried a jovial juror, "taking a pack of cards from his pocket."

"But, gentlemen! I should, and then directed to them my situation. The judge waiting for me—the jury waiting for me! My speech would have moved a heart of stone."
