After the manner of "Stabat Mater." Doomed in agony to languish, Dying on the cross of anguish, Once the blessed Jesus hung,-Mercy on his foes imploring, From his burning eyes outpouring

There the Lord of life and glory, Hung, with body bleeding, gory, By fierce flagellations torn While around him, they who bound him, Who with thorns in mockery crowned him. Mocked him still in fiendish scorn

Trembling, sighing, bleeding, dying, On his wrathful Father crying, Suffering grief's intensest pang, There he died, with darkness o'er him, While from frantic foes before him Fiercest imprecations rang.

Depth of sorrow! Blessed Jesusnere to heal our sore diseases Hung he in his agony :-While the Heavens were Nature in low muttered thunder Trembled with her Deity.

Oh! that sorrow all unspoken,-

Oh! that heart by sorrow broken, Oh! that Saviour crocified :-Oh! might I, all else unfearing, How the great Creator died. Blessed Jesus! Here before thee.

Tremblingly would I adore thee, Mindful of thy death for me; Trembling, yet in gladness knowing Still that fount of love is flowing, Still that wondrous love is free Oh my Saviour! Thou Most Holy,

Hear me praying, bowing lowly, Here before thy awful throne !-Thou who life in kindness gave me, From its sore temptations save me, Thou canst save, and Thou alone

CHAPTER XVII. CONCLUDED.

Shortly after Willie's return to New York, he was visited by Mr. King. That gentleman did not wait for Willie to call upon him, but supposing that he would feel some delicacy under circumstances, he went to see him as soon as he heard of his arrival.

The meeting was a very pleasant one, and Mr. King drew from Willie tis own story.
"You must not suppose," said he, "that I have been in ignorance of your movements.—

Your Aunt informed me all about what you splended it would be. We could all live together were doing. I felt that in your case I could do nothing.' "I think that you were very inconsiderate in leaving college as you did. Why did you not come and see me face to face, instead of merely writing a formal letter. Everything might have easantly arranged. I did not send you to college to be a minister. Man does not make ministers. The Almighty only can make true servants for himself. I sent you to get an edu cation. I supposed that you would choose the ministry, as you seemed to be inclined that way, but still if you had changed your mind, it would not have made a particle of difference. So, in this respect, you were unwise. "You were also very rash and thoughtless, my dear boy, in supposing that you would have to give up the Bible. Because a few difficulties . Because a few difficulties suggested themselves, must religion and faith give way? Could you not think that by patient watching, and by exercising faith and hi that in process of time your troubles would pass away, and all your problems be solved? But leaped at once to the wildest conclusions, and sought for safety only in yoursefl.

"Do not suppose that I am scolding," he continued, with a smile. "I have never been angry but on the contrary, I have felt pleased. The mind, Willie, can only be fortified through sea vere exercise. Yours is now all the stronger for the troubles with which you have had to contend. I have thought all along that this would be the best thing that could happen to you, and have believed that you would emerge from this diffi-culty, stronger, and more faithful to God, than ever before." The result was, that Willie returned to college again. He had lost a year in his studies, but how much had he gained. Other trials might now come, other doubts might distract him, but he telt that he now rested entirely upon the Rock of Ages, and that in every storm he would have a firm support. that last year he lived far differently from his former life. The service of God was now his chief delight, the joys of religion his chief consolation. Among the protessions of religion within the college, none were so undring in these sacred duties, so ferven in prayer, or so bold in witnessing for Jesus. His life of devotion was not without its fruits. Its effects became visible even here, and he was able to rejoice in being the honored instrument of bringssome to Jesus.

Of his friend Silby, he heard occasionally .-He had introduced his invention pretty extensively throughout the country and it prom At last he went to Eog'and, and Willie saw in English papers most flattering notices of the young American and his ingenious instrument. He exhibited it before many of the chief people in the land, and was on the high road toward wealth and fame.

But in his peaceful rural church Willie looked out upon the world, and saw the progress of Silby without envy. His lot had he pleasant places, his treasures were laid up in Heaven, and he felt that a Heavely Father's love had never been more strongly displayed in his life than when he was snatched away from Silby, stricken down, and led into the straight and Delusance Unrivalted American Hair narrow road. He wished no better let than this stricken down, and led into the straight and narrow road.
