SCHOONER'S CREW RESCUED AFTER AWFUL EXPERIENCE

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 19.—Another tale of sea, having to do with the horrors of shipwreck in mid-ocean, was told today by Captain Cleverdon Maxwell and the crew of six men of the schooner Everet Webster, who arrived on the Philadelphia of the American line. At the same time they explained the month-old mystery surrounding the derelict schooner which had been reported by almost every Atlantic liner as lying in the main waterway and as being a serious menace to navigation. The Webster, a three-masted schooner, belonging to Hald and Cummins of Philadelphia, left Wilmington, N. C., on March 31, bound for Philadelphia.

When off Cape Hatteras she ran into a series of heavy gales and on the third day out sprang a leak forward. The deckhead was washed away. An April 8 there came another gale and the Webster quickly filled again. The vessel then became unmanageable, and she sank down at the head so that her bow was under water. Captain Maxwell gathered his men in the stern of the ship, the only part above water, and a council was held. It was found that all the food they had was a barrel of biscuits, and that there was but a gallon jar of water.

In the meantime the fury of the storm had increased and the waves constantly broke over the men, so that they were obliged to lash themselves to sea, away from the regular track of vessels, and to add to their plight a wave which swept over the stern upset the biscuit barrel and all but a few of the biscuits were lost.

The water was giving out and the men were completely exhausted. Their limbs were swollen, their bodies bruised with many wounds and most of them were delirious from loss of sleep and want of food and water.

The waves washing the men added to their pitiable condition. For thirty-six hours Captain Maxwell was able to give each man only a small portion of a ship's biscuit and about a teaspoonful of water from the jar.

For six days the men lived under these conditions. On April 12, early in the morning, Captain Maxwell, looking to the westward, spied what looked like a schooner coming toward them. The members of the crew were too delirious to realize what was happening, but he saw that the vessel was the schooner Captain Laddome, from Philadelphia to Rouen, France, approached the doomed Webster, Captain Maxwell fell exhausted to the deck. The crewly lowered the boat and, although high seas made the work dangerous, the men were rescued.

REV. DR. WATSON'S LOYALIST ANNIVERSARY SERMON AN ELOQUENT PROTEST AGAINST MATERIALISTIC TENDENCIES OF THE AGE.

The Loyalist Society of St. John last evening attended divine service at Trinity church. The preacher was Rev. Dr. Samuel Watson, of Akron, Ohio, great-grandson of Rev. Samuel Cook, the Loyalist pioneer of the Church of England in New Brunswick.

The Loyalist Society attended in a body and were seated near the front of the church. The society's chaplain, Rev. W. O. Raymond, took part in the service. Dr. Watson's sermon was an eloquent and stirring appeal for the pursuit of the ideal rather than the material.

The preacher took as his text Hebrews 11: 8, "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went."

Dr. Watson began his discourse by marking on the likeness between the U given by God to Abraham and that of our forefathers to go out and under a new country. The preacher's great-grandfather, Samuel Cook, like a ancestor of so many of the inhabitants of this province, had gone out, not knowing whither he went. There stood in the family records a letter from London by Dr. Cook to his son, in which he tells of his appointment as a missionary to New Brunswick, and in which he declares his ignorance of the country or the conditions he would be there encountered. Every honor due to these men who went they w not whither at the call of duty principle. Honor could also be those who took the other side, the great conflict that divided North America. They also endured privation hardship for the sake of what they believed to be right. They had the vision.

Every age there had been seers, said Dr. Watson, and it mattered not to what country the visions came. The seer of visions was all of a higher type than the man was swayed by personal interests and aggrandizement. The man who a vision and yet those and not the lower and groser aims of the worse life. As had well been "Where there is no vision the die."

Watson went on to refer to a entitled "Letters of a Chinese to a book which though written by an Englishman, was so caustic criticism of Anglo-Saxon civilization as compared with Chinese, that it provoked a spirited reply from Bishop Graves of the United States. Who desired to defend his religion and civilization from the attacks of a presumed pagan.

William J. Bryan had also written a reply to the "Letters" before he had ascertained that the author was an Englishman. However, Bryan's answer was a most terrible indictment against a country that had no vision. In the original work one passage had protested against the invasion of China by missionaries and commercial agents.

"We Chinese," it said, "do not consider that we have a mission to civilize or reform the world." Bryan had replied that no worse accusation could be brought against a nation by a foreigner. "When you say your nation has no mission, that is, it is unconcerned with the affairs of the rest of the world, you say that it is dead." That was the indictment made by Bryan. The same would be true of our own rich country if the men and women who would be the parents of the next generation were visionless and missionless. Every leader in religious or intellectual life had encountered the cry "We want no mission; we seek no vision; we want to live out our little lives by ourselves. Petty social engagements and petty pleasures were allowed to interfere with the pursuit of true life."

"We should look deeper into things and not at surface indications," said the preacher. "History shows plainly the penalty inflicted on nations too much given up to selfish pursuits. They die and the place that knows them knows them no more."

Dr. Watson went on to deal with the weaknesses of the modern educational system. There was too great a tendency to follow the line of least resistance, too many options were allowed the student, too easy hours were permitted. A military education might be open to criticism but at least it developed a love for the hard things and a desire for discipline and not anarchy.

"There was little wonder that the Chinese official saw an opportunity to criticize the materialistic tendencies of the age. It would be better for us if we were honest pagans than to live the life they lead."

The traditions of old England should be defended by those who lived in this country. God had allowed the Anglo-Saxon tongue to become the most wide-spread speech of the world for a purpose. It should be our duty to preserve our high ideals and to keep our traditions before us. A commercial spirit should not be allowed to destroy traditions and ideals. There had been and was a certain complacent belief in the fact that the nation was white-skinned and English-speaking ensured its being great forever. May we keep our eyes wide open to the fact that only way to ensure this was to keep our faith in England's law.

"Visions are the young man's belief in great principles despite the dirt of practicality. Dreams are the old man's belief that what he has struggled for will become a reality; may we keep our ideals before us. If we do so our national destiny will be as a house founded on a rock and will not fall."

TWO MORE DREADNOUGHTS.
LONDON, May 18.—Orders have been received at the Portsmouth and Devonport dockyards to lay the keels of a battleship of the Dreadnought type for each yard as soon as the battleships Temeraire and Bellefleur, now in course of building, have been launched. They will be launched in August next.

The understanding was that in case the proposal of disarmament should take definite shape in The Hague Peace Conference only one new Dreadnought would be laid down. The order for two Dreadnoughts is Great Britain's acknowledgment of Germany's refusal to entertain the question of disarmament.

ONE MAN CAN'T HANDLE

Penitentiary Sojourn Because He Thoughtlessly Played Favorites.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 18.—W. W. Nernberger, a Civil War veteran of Grant county, North Dakota, faces a sentence of one year in the penitentiary, and $2,000 fine because he lacked ability to manage and govern twenty widows.

And he doesn't prefer the penitentiary to his late task, for he is striving in the United States Court of Appeals to have the sentence of the lower court set aside.

Nernberger was successful in managing all but seven of the widows, then he did a foolish thing for one who had been studying the history of Solomon, and his thousand wives—he married the widow that had the most money.

In 1900 Nernberger's first wife became ill and he accompanied her to Bowling Green, Ohio, her old home, to recuperate. She died there and it wasn't long before Nernberger began casting glances at his old war comrades' wives, who for years had been grandmothers.

He was not a gay Lothario for fun, however, for his love plans entailed exporting the widows to North Dakota, where he caused them to file on homestead claims which he had selected in Ward county.

To expedite his quest for a hurry-up fortune, he caused the widows to sign a contract which provided that in consideration of $200 each they should deed their claims over to him as soon as they received title. This they did, but Nernberger wasn't satisfied. He wanted more wealth.

Nernberger announced that he intended to wed one of the widows. Each and every other widow in the party was up in arms in an instant.

The engagement at the outset promised to be hotter than any Nernberger ever had been in during the war, but he stood to his guns. The widows complained to the government, and an investigation followed.
