TO ALL THE CROWNED HEADS

The Most Exclusive Jeweller's Shop in the World.

On the second floor of the modest building in a side-street off Piccadilly are the London headquarters of perhaps the largest jewellers in the world. The parent establishment is in St. Petersburg, and it has branches in every civilized capital in Europe. The name is and would be unknown to the general public, and a peculiarity of the concern is that it boasts no show-rooms, and pays no huge rent for a good position in a fashionable thoroughfare.

A door opens from a landing of the second floor into a plainly-furnished office, containing a couple of huge safes and the usual office paraphernalia. You are welcomed by a stout, fat-headed young Russian, who speaks English with the slightest foreign accent, and receives you with that delightful courtesy which is such a distinguishing trait of the educated Russian. This young gentleman is the London manager of the business, the son of the proprietor; for, with the wonderful ramifications of this firm, it is necessary that everything should be done in the very best style, and education and manners are a necessity.

ALMOST INCREDIBLE PRICES.
Leading off the office is another room, severely but tastefully furnished in the Louis Seize period. You are shown into this and asked if you "would like to see some little things," as the young Russian puts it.

You might be in a private house, with your host entertaining you, for a courteous offer is made of cigarettes, any light refreshment that may take your fancy. The man is not a Jew, but may mean an extraordinary way of selling jewellery; but when it is explained that this firm caters solely and entirely for the very wealthy class, and is unofficially the jeweller to all the crowned heads of Europe, this particular quiet way of trading will be understood.

From his suite in the office the Russian brings in armfuls of little white polished wood cases.

He opens them carefully, and says, "What a pity you were not here two days ago! I had some lovely things I could have shown you."

To the poor scribe, the fine things he has spread in lavish profusion on the table are quite pretty enough, and the prices are such as to seem almost incredible.

DIAMOND IN FIFTY MINUTES.
Diamond butterflies, brooches, and hair ornaments, at prices ranging from £35 to £7,000 are often to be seen in ordinary jewellers' shops. Here they are in plenty, and, as our Russian friend says: "Of course, anybody can make those; it's only to get the diamonds. But it is for art, if I may say so, that we are renowned."

Thin little clocks, in cases no bigger than photograph-frames, with the most beautiful enamel, and work which I am not technical enough to describe, but the whole producing an effect of shimmering beauty which only a painter could reproduce. These little clocks ranged in prices from £340 to £600. Here a diminutive engagement-ring, with pencil-cut facets by golden cord, at £180; there two bird-boxes, £110 each, quite simple, yet chaste in design, and beautifully worked in enamel. It seems incredible that there should be people willing to pay those prices.

"Yes," said the Russian, calmly. "I had a gentleman in here yesterday. He just looked round, and he took three bird-boxes at £110 each, a gold in-laid cigarette-case for madame, and one or two other little things; and altogether he spent a thousand pounds, and he was in here, fifty minutes only. But, see, this is pretty."

A little seven-chamber cut out of pure crystal in the shape of a nun; £50, if you please. But to a connoisseur the work itself was worth almost that sum. A fan, £350; a dear little miniature barometer, £220. Here, too, are some of the little ornaments in which the Queen delights, and of which only a connoisseur can appreciate the value. Diminutive balls of cut-crystal are set with two jade leaves rising from them, and on these leaves hang real turquoise and rubies.

MOST EXCLUSIVE USE OF SHOPS.
Articles, of course, are also made to order—coats-of-arms, college colors, in fact, any hue that is known can be reproduced in enamel, for here it is a speciality. Boxes of enamel, some with wavy patterns, some flat and smooth. Choose your color and your pattern, and the order will be fulfilled within a month with an exactitude which is almost marvellous.

Nearly all the presents that foreign Royalty shows when they pay State visits are made by this firm. The Tsar and his family buy from hardly any one else, and of an afternoon in the Russian establishment Grand Dukes abound, and buy with that reckless prodigality which distinguishes the Russian circle.

Quiet good taste distinguishes the firm's goods, and it may be added also, a large price. But they do not sell to the merely rich people—in fact, hardly anybody but Royalty or the very rich could afford to deal here.

Of course, they keep diamond ornaments, but as the young Russian says, anybody can get diamonds; it is the art that we love.

And I think the young man was right, for nobody but a true artist, be he a jeweller or not, could originate and produce such a beautiful and delicate piece of work as that little clock with its face no larger than that of a watch, made to the special order of an English peer, and for which the price is £240.

HOW IT IS GUARDED.

There seemed to be no special precautions taken in this modest office at first glimpse. But as you leave you notice that the doors are heavily barred, that the two safes are the latest invention, and guaranteed to be absolutely burglar-proof, even against the dreaded electricity. Also, you notice as you are leaving with your host that he sits in a clean-shaven man with rather a noticeable chest development. This is a retired sailor, who sleeps on the premises all night, with a loaded revolver by him.

Snake MYTHS.

Snakes have no medicinal qualities, as the following popular notions are myths: That galls of snakes are an antidote for snake bites; that their oil is good for rheumatism, baldness and deafness; that wearing their skins will cure rheumatism or stiffness; that a snake heart, oil or blood is good for consumption or other ill; that snake flesh should be eaten for blood disorders; that a second bite of the snake in the same place will cure of counter-act the first bite; that rattlers of snakes are charms.

THE VALUE OF AN OPINION.

One of the most discouraging features in the case of the young man who stays at home is the fact that, no matter what he may do, he seldom is given credit. If he takes his father's business and makes it go big, everybody gives the credit to the father. If he knows of one case in a small western city. A merchant who had been considered wealthy and prominent died and left everything to his son. The boy had been away from home for three years and was doing fairly well in a strange city without relying upon paternal assistance. He returned and took hold of the business. To his surprise, he found conditions rotten. Beyond the good will and assets secured, he would have the liabilities. He dug in, worked desperately and in two years' time had things straightened out and was on the highroad to prosperity. A sudden business collapse in the town, followed by a bank crash, caught him hard, and he was forced to assign. He paid dollar for dollar, yet today in that town they point him out as a man who wrecked his father's business—Jonas Howard in Chicago Tribune.
