

join with those who are intensely moved by the determination to compel good to come from this evil of war.

If I can make one devote to the war energies which otherwise would have remained idle, if two shall be made to see understandingly where but for my words they might have remained blind, if for three I may be able to implant hope where formerly there has been despair, my work will have been justified and I amply repaid.

B. A. G.

Toronto, April, 1918.