BETTER THOUGHTS.

Genius at first is little more than a great capacity for receiving discipline.

Beautiful are the admonitions of him whose life accords with his teachings.

How truly, says St. Thomas Aquinas, "A friend is better than honors; to be loved is better than to be honored."

There is no sorrow greater than to love what is great, and try to reach it, and yet to fail.

Pride is a statue whose pedestal is ignorance; take away the pedestal and down comes the statue.—Father Burke, O. P.

Life is so complicated a game that the devices of skill are liable to be defeated at every turn by air-borne chances.

In a hot summer, when there is most thirst, there are fewest brooks. So of many people's charity—it is rarest when most needed.

POLITENESS may prevent the want of wit and talents from being discovered, but wit and talent cannot prevent the discovery of the want of politeness.

Wealth in this world is just so much baggage to be taken care of, but a cultivated brain is easy to carry, and is a source of profit and pleasure.

Thousands of poor children who ought to be Catholics grow up ignorant of everything concerning religion and their duty to God through this evil of mixed marriage.—Father Brady.

The Session of the British Parliament has now lasted more than two months, and out of eighty-nine bills entered upon the orders of the House of Commons, only thirteen have been introduced. The "massacre of the innocents," thanks to the Irish obstructives, this time will be terrible indeed.

Canon Farrar says:—"He alone, by whom the hairs of our head are all numbered, can count the widows who are widows because of alcohol; the gray heads that it has made gray; the sad he fits that it has crushed with sadness; the ruined families that it ruined; brilliant minds that it has quenched; the unfolding promises which it has canceled; the bright and happy boys and girls whom it has blasted into misery; the young and the gifted whom it has hurried into dishonored and nameless graves."

The design of Divine Providence, which had assigned to the Roman Pontiff a temporal dominion, in order that he might enjoy secure liberty and true independence in the exercise of his supreme religious power, was broken by the series of acts of violence which were successively consummated to the detriment of the Apostolic See, acts by which the Pontiff remained manifestly despised of all freedom and independence.—Lo XIII.

Could not our Lord have lived without labor? Could He not dispense His father and mother from painful toil? Was it not in His power to procure for them the lightest, most agreeable and safe occupations? If He did not do so, it was to give us a lesson. In subjecting His father, and submitting Himself to hard labor, He did not intend to rebuke the work of the intelligence, but He wished to encourage and honor that kind of labor which least flatters our self-love. And indeed, it is this kind especially that requires this encouragement because it is the most fatiguing and thankless and yet the most necessary to life. He wished to console the laboring class—the poor and suffering. He wished to change the ideas of men, to teach them that God judges of things, not according to their value or pride, but according to their real value—to proclaim openly the safe and only way to heaven, the way of the cross, the way of humility, self-abnegation, penance and suffering, the way which all the saints have followed after Him. Because it is in reality the better part, He chose it for His father and mother; and would have none other for Himself.

MARY'S CARE.

When St. Thomas of Canterbury was an infant, his mother used to place him in a scale, and give to the poor in honor of our Blessed Lady an alms of food and clothes equal to his weight. Mary in return became the guide and patroness of his life. As he lay on his sick-bed she stood before him in her beauty as the Queen of Paradise, and promised him health during the trials and sorrows of his episcopate he refreshed his spirit by repeating daily seven Ave's in honor of Mary's seven earthly joys. Once when he thus layed, Mary appeared and bade him thank God also for the seven joys which are hers for eternity; and promised that he should share with her the joys of paradise. So it proved. As the assassin fell upon him, he recommended his soul to Mary's care, and thus won the grace of perseverance and the martyr's crown.—Ave Maria.

A NATION OF BOASTERS.

If things go on much longer as they have progressed under the Gladstonian régime, Englishmen will speedily become ashamed of their country, and the institutions which they have idealized. In short, we are being found out at home and abroad. Foreigners now look upon us as a nation of Phrasers, who are constantly boasting that we are better than our neighbors, but when tested prove as bad, and perhaps worse. We have proclaimed ourselves trumpet-tongued to the world as the friends of freedom everywhere, the sympathizers with nationalities, striving to conquer their independence; as devotees of obtaining for others the blessings of free speech, absence of arbitrary arrest, trial by jury, &c., etc. of private correspondence as well as of the persons, etc. of justice; as the best of the duly constituted legal tribunals. But within the last three months this budget of blessing has been pricked and proven a mere bubble—a windbag, and nothing more!—Reynold's Newspaper.

In a recently published work, entitled "Trials of the Church," by the Rev. W. Gleeson, of California, we read that in one century, from 1234 to 1334, as many as 13,370 members of the Order of St. Dominic died for the faith, and from 1500 to 1600 no less than 26,000 of the same order were martyred. Within the last 42 years 55 Dominicans were put to death, in the year 1290 26,570 of the Jesuit converts in Japan were martyred.

WHAT READING SENSATIONAL STORIES DID FOR ONE BOY.

The Paris correspondent of the London Telegraph relates this incident in real life: Last week a boy named Lemaître, a lad of 14, who had been fed on the wholesome food of naturalistic novels, was walking quietly through the streets when he saw a little child of six years old trotting along with his books under his arm, coming home from school. Lemaître stopped the child, and showed him a steel chain, and told him he would give him one like it if he came with him. The little fellow hesitated; his mother was waiting for him, and he was impatient to show her the good marks he had got for a page of pothooks and hangers that day; but Lemaître grew very urgent, and coaxes him with promises of other pretty things besides the chain, so the child gave in and went with the lad to his room in a house close by. Lemaître then stripped him, tied the little fellow to the bed, and deliberately cut his body open.

The skill of the butchery I will spare you. As soon as the murder was accomplished he walked off coolly and ate his breakfast.

The crime was discovered in a few hours, and Lemaître was arrested. He confessed the murder with the most cynical effrontery, and declared his sole motive in committing it had been the desire to enact a scene of the sort which he had read recently in a novel. "I followed as closely as I could," he said, "the murder as it was described. I had never seen the little boy before, but when he came trotting along towards me I saw everything red, and it struck me at once that he would do to imitate that scene in the book." When interrogated by the judge as to why he had cut the child open, instead of cutting his throat, Lemaître replied, "that was how it was done in the novel; and besides, I wanted to see how he would look . . ."

When asked if he was not afraid of the consequences of his horrible experiment, he replied, "No; they never gullotine now, and, besides, I am under the age."

He continues in prison to boast of what he has done, and asks if the newspapers are making a great talk about him, and if they are selling his photograph in the shop window.

The parents of the poor little victim of this diabolical disciple of naturalism are an honest couple who live at La Villette, and earn their livelihood by the rag and bone business. This was their only child, and they were devotedly attached to him.

The agony of the mother is so great that it is not expected she will live.

Numbers of children in La Villette, and all his school-friends and teachers, with whom little Jean was a favorite, from his gentleness and pretty ways, walked in procession after the coffin to the grave, and covered it with flowers. When Lenten time was taken to the house where he had done the deed, he had great difficulty in saving himself from being torn to pieces by the infuriated population. It is said that Schiller's play of The Robbers sent some imaginative young gentlemen in Germany out on the highway, but assuredly neither Schiller, nor Walter Scott, nor George Eliot, nor even any of the sensational novelists of our day can boast of such a tribute in their descriptive powers as the juvenile criminal of La Villette has rendered to the novelists of the French modern naturalistic school. Well may the venerable Cardinal Guibert conclude his Lenten Pastoral with the exhortation to teach them that God judges of things, not according to their value or pride, but according to their real value—to proclaim openly the safe and only way to heaven, the way of the cross, the way of humility, self-abnegation, penance and suffering, the way which all the saints have followed after him. Because it is in reality the better part, He chose it for His father and mother; and would have none other for Himself.

THE DETROIT, MACKINAC & MARQUETTE RAILROAD COM'Y

NOW OFFER FOR SALE OVER 1,350,000 ACRES

Of the Choicest FARMING and TIMBERED Lands in the Northern Peninsula of Michigan.

Destined to be the best wheat-producing region in the world. These lands are situated in the counties of Chippewa, Mackinac, Schooeroff and Marquette, and embrace many thousand acres of timber land.

Among those in the counties of Chippewa and Mackinac are tracts of what are known as the "burnt" or cleared lands. These lands offer many advantages over the prairie lands of the west, as timber lands adjoining insure a supply of fuel at little cost. The soil being generally rich and loamy, grain does well and thrives upon the land being generally suitable for the settler's use in building and fencing.

The partially cleared lands are now offered at the low price of $10 to $15 per acre, one-fourth payable annually at seven percent.

Roads are being opened through these lands, and no better opportunity has ever been offered to a man to secure a good farm, and intending purchasers will be wise by availing themselves of this opportunity to purchase lands rapidly when settled upon.

The lands more immediately on the line of the Detroit, Mackinac and Marquette Railroad, fronting on the line of Mackinac to Marquette, are more heavily timbered, and almost universally good agricultural lands, leaving splendid farms when the timber is removed.

The iron and lumber interests of the upper peninsula are of such magnitude as to call for all kinds of labor, and the lands will be sold with produce—this will enable the settler to make good wages while clearing the land.

Lumber Mills and Charcoal Kilns will be built at various points along the line, and Furnaces are now being erected along the line of the road at Point St. Ignace.

The lands are now offered at prices not above $15 per acre, and in the early part of summer, make these lands particularly desirable as homes for the poor man. The lands adjacent the Railroad are offered at prices from $5 up according to location, value of timber, etc. The lands are at your very door, and are easily accessible to all railroads.

For pamphlets, maps and other information, address,

W. O. STRONG, Land Commissioner, 39 Newberry and McMillan Building, Detroit, Michigan.
