"Tis Ever Thus."

As the sun sank in the wiid-wood, Buried in a blood-red sea, Fell an Indian chieftain forward, Gasped and died-from earth was free-Free to leave his mounds and wigwams; Free to leave his foe and friend; Free to seek the land of promise, Where his bow may ever bend.

Then his spirit hastened onward, Never heeding shade or man. Hastened to the beckoning beacon-Hastened as no mortal can. Till he reached a gaping chasm, Yawning, fearful, grim and dark, In whose depths the waters raging Dashed to pieces every barque, Awed, dismayed, the chieftain halted, Gazed with fear upon the scene; Saw behind him woe and torment, Saw before him fields serene. Yet the chasm frowned forbidding, By a single vine bridge spanned; He must cross that treacherous footway, Ere he gains the hunting land.

Must he turn from bliss eternal? From his brightest dream awake? To the great hope of a life time, A farewell forever take? Must be grasp for glittering gold dust, Worthless sand and base alloy? Must be drink the cup of anguish, For the rich red wine of joy?

Then with heart of resolution, Strides he to the threatening brink; Steps upon the quivering footway-He must conquer or must sink! Trembling with steps of caution, Glides he slowly, slowly on; Now he stops as if uncertain, Now he sways—he's almost gone!

See! again he's creeping onward, Nearer, nearer to the shore; One step forward, firm and steady, And he's safe forevermore, Look! he trembles-totters-wavers-Wildly flings his arms in air!
Now he falls! Ah! now he's buried In the pit of dark despair.

Thus the barque of young ambition Sinks beneath the surging wave; Sweetest buds have no fauition, Dearest day-dreams but a grave.

Ernest Thornton's Enemy.

[CONCLUDED.]

Ernest began to assume material shape. that desirable pale.

seemed to probe his very soul.

occupation, and try the influence of the Gore! country and the companionship of a chance to vent their spleen.

could sustain her in this great trial. The tish tonels and belango od na that they were not as he was; so far they elequent lips would fail to enchant him the most beautiful girl I ever beheld humble circumstances, to whom he had lives within five miles of Cheltenham, been the means of rendering much kind

But in spite of all this disgrace and country life-for quiet country life docs lashes. not demand the stimulants that the restless city does.

had not the home to take her to that he so very uncommon! had hoped so confidently to earn in the lightful little home it made.

Never to this day has Ernest Thorn. of the collection. ton again indulged the appetite that honest, plain-going old farmer, whose the same manuer. word is as good as gold, and who is a model of a christian gentleman, would Bacon says, very justly, that the best fairies who dwelt in a house of roces. as lovely as nature, their milliners and hardly believe this chapter of his early part of beauty is that which a picture All this is true, said Tyrold; but hair-dressers could make them; cha-

Invited by Mistake;

MRS. ESTCOURT'S EVENING SOIREE.

HELTENHAM is noted for the gaiety and variety of its entertainments: it must be a remarkable sort of party to cause much excitement at Cheltine, of such an affair as the Ingletoun Tournament could hope to effect it! opinion. Mrs. Estcourt, however, a widow lady simply an evening party: the invited the ladies shall be all beautiful. were as happy as Cinderella's elder sis- And what will you do, asked Tyrold. derella herself!

Mrs. Estcourt's brother, Mr. Amherst ters. was wealthy and eccentric; he had been ous amiabilities and excellencies. He vitations. HE mission was a sad one, and the was consequently a most determined the rumors had been only too true. Er- so long in making his choice, that the the fair ones of your acquaintance, but speaking likeness, nest had left his partner in anger, and old gentleman departed from the world a whole basket full of them ! was now clerking it in a grocery store. before it was decided. His will was Tyrold immediately communicated The money he had invested with Mr. opened, and it was found that, after this conversation to Amherst, and, al-Gilman had been drawn out, and was leaving a handsome legacy to his sister, though he affected to laugh at his aunt's soon squandered, and he had to work at Mrs Estcourt, he bequeathed the whole folly, it was evident he was greatly deof his large property to his nephew, in lighted at the idea of the party in pre-Mr. Gilman confirmed the stories event of his marrying within two years paration for him. But how shall I deafloat about Ernest's dissipation, and after his uncle's death; if he failed to scribe the effect that Mrs. Estcourt's their heavy hearts sank within them; comply with this condition he was invitation cards produced in Cheltenbut love urged them to seek him out merely to enjoy a life income of five hun ham? The cool indifference of the proand try to bring him home once more. | dred a year and the bulk of the proper- fessed beauty, who carelessly threw by With Mr. Gilman's assistance they ty was to revert to a third cousin with her card of invitation, saying that of found his boarding-place. Up a flight thirteen children! A year and nine course there could never have been a of stairs they were ushered into a pleas- months of the allotted period had elaps- doubt of her receiving one; the ill-disant enough room, although carelessly ed, and Amherst was as yet unmarried. guised satisfaction of the doubtful belle. kept and in disorder. With throbbing He came at the earnest request of Mrs. who was not quite certain whether she hearts and tearful eyes they glanced Estcourt, to pass a few weeks with her should come up to the requisite standabout the apartment, but Ernest was at Cheltenham: one of his most inti- ard of appearance; the indignation of got up for the purposes of vanity and not in. It was but a moment, however, mate friends was staying in the town at the merely pretty girls who received no before his steps was heard on the stairs, the same time, and Mrs. Estcourt soon card, although each had half-a-dozen and he stood before them, fortunately held a private council with the latter flirts who had compared her to Helen,

and it nonplussed him to have his mo how important it is that my nephew that the passably handsome were as ther and betrothed suddenly step into should shortly select a wife; I wish he much excluded as themselves. A sin. his room and throw themselves into his would allow me to choose one for him. gular circumstance attended this party rare specimens of dried plants, and a arms. Joy, pain, mortification and self- can you give me an idea of the sort of -not one invitation was refused; sevreproach were all mingled in his excited person he prefers? but why should I eral of the beauties had previous en. did engravings. A favorable answer tary steed attached to her small chariot, feelings. His outraged conscience and ask? I know the catalogue of impossi- gagements, which they broke through misdeeds reproached him; and then bilities that a bachelor's bride must to favor Mrs. Estcourt with their society. roses, Mrs. Gerard, grateful for the from some distance of the first of the from some distance of the first of the first of the from some distance of the first of those sorrowing eyes and pitying faces possess; she must be a kind of union of Some people were so uncharitable as to past gifts of her correspondent, anxious from some distance. Corinne, Lucilla Stanley, Rose Bradwar- say that the report of young Amherst's to see the dried plants and the work on Not a word was said concerning his dine, and Flora McIvor, gifted with the search for a wife and the condition of botany, and happy in the consciousness changes in business or his dissipation, prudence and self possession of Miss his uncle's legacy, had a great deal to that it was the merry month of May, but they pleaded with him to go home Edgeworth's heroines, and finished off do with their line of conduct; the re- and that she had nothing to apprehend with them; to abondon the city and his by the grace and fashion of those of Mrs. port had certainly become public, but of from dark nights and rheumatism, re-

He could not resist their appeals, and Amherst in particular; he is far from the next few days in Cheltenham, would old lady !- prepared herself for a cup the next day the three returned to the being unreasonable in his requisitions— have been ordered all the same had of coffee and a biscuit, and subsequent country. It was a sad return home. It he only covets exquisite and perfect Mrs. Estcourt's beauty party never been glass of sherry and macaroons, partaken was useless to try to cover up the repula beauty; like the knights-errant of old thought of. sive truth from the eyes of the world, he would fain throw the gauntlet of de- Did you say, asked Tyrold of Mrs. which gave the gossips and his enemies fiance to the world in assertion of the Estcourt, that you had mustered all the charms of his lady-love.

The disgrace fell heavily upon Rose I wish my nephew had more seuse, ham? also, and nothing but her love and the said Mrs. Estcourt, (who had never I have done so, she replied, and, in had been procured for the approaching "For redness, make Roses look pale beside them."

Agent Harlor Grace.

A few months after his return home court, why does he find it so difficult to in the centre of the hall.

They are far too common, said Ty- tenham?

got up a beauty quadrille?

lousy among the guests.

great deal of good is to come of it.

enham; nothing short, one would imag- to hear what she had to propose, did D'Arblay's Camilla; but intellect, as I Neither were the beauties themselves

I know many beautiful girls in Chelparty, neither a ball, nor a concert, nor a party; the gentlemen shall be such as a private play, nor even a supper, but I would ask on any other occasion, but ters, the uninvited as melancholy as Cin- if the beauty should happen to be af- knew to be such by ocular demonstra- had hitherto been devoted to one alone flicted with two or three ordinary sis, tion or by the voice of popular acclama. seemed for the first time to find out that I shall not invite them, said Mrs. Estthrice married, but died a widower and court. With the exception of a few childless; he had been singularly fortu- necessary chaperons, who will form an nate in the matrimonial lottery, his admirable background to the picture. three wives having been positive, com- my guests shall be all young and lovely. parative, and superlative, in their varia I shall immediately go and write the in-journey seemed endless, for their friend to matrimony, and had used every you succeed in providing a partner for me to High Street. anxiety increased as they neared the argument in his power to persuade his life for your niphew, you will make your Miss Gerard told me she had been sit- nothing is so destructive to ease as the gentleman on the affairs of her nephew. Hebe and Euphrosyne; and the triumph He was too much surprised to speak, You are aware, Mr. Tyrold, she said, of the unmistakably plain, at finding beauties within a few miles of Cheltenhope that she could yet rescue him been handsome herself) in rather a pet-some instances where I have not known festival, he had received the intelligence the families, I have prevailed on friends with even more satisfaction than could thoughtless talking of neighbors, and That is a very common wish for to give me an introduction. I have have been anticipated. Amherst, althe ominous, cold shaking of heads, uncles and aunts to entertain in behalf shown myself so open to all suggestion, though, as I have shown, the infatuated made her lot all the more bitter. Those of their nephews and nieces, replied Ty- and talked over the matter with so many slave of beauty, was not at all deficient who should have tried to change the rold; but I confess that the infatuation of my acquaintance, that I am sure in the right sense of what was amiable, course of the drunkard's life, and give of Amherst has sometimes been too much not one beauty really deserving the title kind and benevolent; he had recently, him help and encouragement, turned even for my patience. Life seems to has been omitted in my invitation-cards. in one of his walks in the neighborhood their backs coldly, and seemed to rejoice him a mere book of beauty; the most You are much mistaken, said Tyrold; of Cheltenham, met with a family in predictions of the would-be-wise neigh- Nor would he be satisfied with eyes thought her party the triumph and per- purchased a cottage and some ground bors. Ernest once more threw of this that beamed intellect and kindness, un- fection of good taste and unwearied ac- close to the residence of Mrs Gerard. fatal habit under the strong influence of less they were canopied with arched tivity; she felt much as the Princess Of her they spoke with the utmost re-But since my nephew is indifferent to palace which she had thought so exqui- tering angel, dealing to her inferiors now mental acquirements, said Mrs. Est- site required a roc's egg to be hung up only pecuniary aid, but the kindest and go back to the city to try his fortune next week to Richmond has succumb- had the opportunity of conferring a fa- ion, a green veil and parasol, and a deer again; but this Rose would never con- ed to a still more beautiful brunctte. vor on her without putting myself to dowdy bonnet! He was delighted to sent to, and they rented a few acres of Ramsgate has enchanted him with an any inconvenience, by transferring to find that the amiable unknown possessed ground and removed to the neat little earthly Titania, and Bath dazzled him her, through a mutual friend, a present the beauties of the person as well as eottage that stood on it. Strong hands with a terrestrial Juno; I wish that, which I had just received of some rare those of the mind, and, as he began priworked with a will, and by exercising like the prince in the fairy tale, he could flower seeds, which I had no garden to vately to be excessively nervous about economy, they were successful. Soon have twenty or thirty portraits of beau- sow in, and no inclination to sow if I his uncle's legacy, and to be apprehenthey bought the place, and a most de ties submitted to him at once, and make had. I cannot, however, imagine that sive, that, after all, he should be obliged up his mind to choose the most lovely she can be of any use to me; she is a to link bimself with a blooming termage widow, and lives alone on a moderate ant or graceful simpleton, he felt quite Would it not be better, asked Mrs. income-visits no one, and hears no-gratified in the idea that the beautiful once came so near being his ruin; and Estcourt, with sudden animation, if the thing; her only passion is for flowers, and excellent niece of good Mis. Gerard those who know him now as a wealthy, realities could be presented to him in and the friend who introduced her to me might prove an eligible bride for him. said that she always reminded her of The evening of the party arrived-

Have you ever been in parties, in- with a family, and she has within the and annuals in adjoining room, and the quired Mrs. Estcourt, where they have last six months taken to live with her houris had a clear stage and fair play. his eldest daughter. Mrs, Gerard The whole thing, however, proved a Yes, said Tyrold, and thought it very visits a few friends in her immediate failure; it was all light and no shade: theatrical and very inexpedient; it caus- neighborhood, and at the house of one the eye was fatigued with brightness, ed a decided feeling of envy and jea- of them I yesterday met herself and her and longed to rest on some refreshing niece. Miss Gerard is as lovely as a and quiet object; it gave to the beholder Oh! said Mrs. Estcourt, one must poet's dream: I never saw beauty at more the idea of a scene in a theatrical not mind doing a little harm when a once so winning and so dazzling. I will pagent, or a beautiful collection of waxnot tell you that her intellect equals her work, than of a meeting of the ' Women Tyrold totally disagreed with the appearance; to say the truth, she re- of England, of future wives and molady's logic and morality, but, impatient minded me much of Indiana in Madame thers. not trouble himself to contravene her have told you, is not one of the qualities at all in good humor; each had been that my friend Amherst insists on in a accustomed to be the star of her own wife. Miss Gerard is of a respectable circle, and to look down with a tranquil of moderate fortune, achieved the won- tenham, said Mrs. Estcourt; there are family, perfectly ladylike in manner, sense of superiority on the cheeks lackder; she issued cards for an evening others in the neighborhood: I will give and just the sort of person to captivate ing bloom, and eyes lacking brightness your nephew at first sight; you must in ner vicinity; now she enjoyed these lose no time in securing her. other beauties invited to her festival she and in several cases an admirer, who tion; but Tyrold, like many other young there were others as fair, or fairer. men, might have been pleased by an Have any of my readers been smitte easy deportment and showy person, and with the vain ambition of collecting. magnified the possessor into an enchang party of wits together at dinner? I tress. She gently insinuated her doubts, they have, and have succeeded in the great city, and their thoughts about nephew, young Amherst, to enter into own name famous in Cheltenham for- ting for her portrait to an artist, with spirit of competition. A few of the ever. You will have proved yourself a whom I am acquainted. I called on him beauties were engaged in discourse wit Finally they arrived at Mr. Gilman's, The young man professed great read- perfect goddess of mischief, not only this morning, and prevailed on him to their accustomed flirts, but the co and found, to their deepest sorrow, that iness to comply with his desires, but was throwing one apple of discord among allow me to see the miniature; it is a sciousness that the eyes of Amheret, l > flowers, and her warbling aviary, to pass several hours at a Cheltenham evening party if she had suspected it to be one display. No; Mrs Estcourt wrote to her in the kindest and most friendly manner; hoped the flowerseeds had answered her expectations, requested that she and her niece would pass the even- her appearance. Such, however, was an mised in that event to show her several new work on botany, illustrated by splen- for the sudden indisposition of the soliwas soon forwarded from the house of which rendered it necessary that anothcourse the young ladies gave themselves plied that she and her niece would be Nay, said Tyrold, you do great injus- no trouble about it. and the variety of happy to accept Mrs. Estcourt's friendly tice to bachelors in general, and to exquisite new dresses, ordered during invitation, and actually good, easy, of in company with five or six people as quiet, domestic, and garden-loving as

not think Miss Gerard so handsome as the conversation was not far less bril-

When Amherst's faithful friend announced to him that a Queen of Beauty lives within five miles of Cheltenham, been the means of rendering much kind and has not received a card from you. service in London: they had now be-Mrs Estcourt stood aghast; she had come possessed of a little legacy, they had IS his home, of loving friends and healthy eyebrows, and fringed with silken eye- Badroulboudour might be supposed to spect, and of her niece with something have felt when she was told that the like rapture, describing her as a minist truest sympathy. They did not mention he and Rose were married; but still he fix his choice? Surely beauties are not Do you know Mrs. Gerard, asked Ty- her personal appearance, nor did Amrold, who lives four miles from Chel- herst ask any questions on the subject, having conjured up in his active and city. And so they commenced life toge rold; Amherst has been smitten by a I met with her several times a year creative mind a vision of an erect ther in poverty. Ernest was anxious to beautiful blonde in Londen; and going ago, said Mrs Estcourt, and have since figure, with a somewhat faded complex-

> Certainly it would, answered Tyrold. the good woman in the temple of the the beauties began to pour in, all looking Mrs. Gerard has a brother in London perons wisely filed off to enjoy cards triumphs no longer, all were Leautiful-Mrs. Estcourt paused irresolute; the some, perhaps, more so than herself-

Perhaps, she said, every one might undertaking, I agpeal to them whether liant and agreeable than when the part. You can judge for yourself, said Ty- was judiciously compiled of wits an Do so, said Tyrold; whether or not rold eagerly, by merely accompanying commonplace people. There can be n enjoyment where there is not ease; an aunt, or his particular friend, were su Mrs. Estcourt, not without smiling at to be upon their proceedings, imparte. her romantic errand, accompanied Ty- unwonted constraint to their manner. rold to the artist, and was favored with Mrs. Estcourt proposed music; but a sight of fair Portia's counterfeit, which beauties are not, usually speaking, a was on the point of being despatched to very accomplished race, and there were the residence of her aunt, It was per- few "nouns substantive" among the feetly and unexceptionably lovely, and ladies in question-they had all been Mrs Estcourt returned home in high accustomed to lean on some other person, spirits, to indite her invitation-card to one could sing duets with her cousin, the fair original. Mrs. Estcourt had and another could play on the har; if far too much tack to expect that the her sister accompanied her on the piano quiet, home loving Mrs Gerard would but the cousin and sister were not beauleave her garden-walks, her blooming ties, and had therefore been pronounced uninvitable.

Mrs. Estcourt began to grow very impatient for the arrival of her Queen of Beauty, and made up her mind that Mrs; Gerard was a deal more worldly than she had supposed her to be, and was keeping back her beautiful niece till a late hour, to enhance the effect of ing of Thursday next with her, and pro- uncharitable conjecture; the fact is, that Mrs. Gerard would have arrived the first of the party, had it not been

TO BE CONTINUED.

AND CONCEPTION BAY SEMI . WEEKLY ADVERTISER

Is printed and published by the Proprietors, ALEXANDER A. PARSONS and WIL-LIAM R. SQUAREY, at their Office, (opposite the premises of Capt. D. Green, Water Street, Harbor Grace, Newfound-

Book and Job Printing executed in a manner calculated to afford the utmost satisfaction satisfaction Price of Subscription—Three Dollars per annum, payable half-yearly. Advertisements inserted on the most lib. eral terms, viz. :- Per square of seven. teen lines, for first insertion, $1; each continuation 25 cents.

AGENTS.

CARBONEARM	r. J. Foote.
Brigus	W. Horwood
BAY ROBERTS	R. Simpson.
HEART'S CONTENT	C. Rendell.
TRINITY HARBOR	B. Mifler
NEW HARBOR	J. Miller
CATALINA	" J. Edgecombe.
CATALINABONAVISTA	" A. Vincental
St. Pierre	"H. J Watt.

TO SECT

dmoad

Aug

USEFUI

S. M. 5 12 | 13 19 | 20 26 | 27

Calculated

Full Moon. Last Quarte New Moon. First Quarte

Mail Steat

For Liverpoo For Halifax For Liverpo For Halifax. For Liverpoo For Liverpo For Halifax. For Liverpo For Halitax. For Liverpo For Halifax. For Liverpoo For Halifax. For Liverpoo For Halifax

For Liverpo For Halifax.

For Liverpo

For Halifax

Wholesal Bread-Ham No. 1 FLOUR-Cana Super CORN MEAL-

OATMEAL-CO RICE-East I PEAS- Round Butter-Can ericai CHEESE-9d, t Ham-9d. to Pork-Amer mess BEEF-Prime,

Rum-per Im MOLASSES-M ed 1s SUGAR - Musco Coffee-1s. TEA-Congou LARD-Americ LEATHER-Am

Tobacco-Can Amer Scotia CORDAGE—per SALT—per hho KEROSENE OIL CCAL-per tor

172 WA Tin, Cop

EGS and o mence 172 W opposite the Munn & Co., ders in the abo despatch, hop

Done at th

Dec. 13.

discouragement, and the unfavorable! HALLOHOSBHILES