BELFAST, Sept. 29. The culminating day of protest against Home Rule opened with absolute calmness, which rendered Unionists and Home Rulers alike nervous as to what might happen. The town was gaily decorated, the Union Jack being everywhere predominant. Most of the shops and the big industrial works were closed. The spirit of unity prevailing among the Protestants was illustrated by the selection as officiating clergyman of Rev. Dr. McLean, formerly Presbyterian Moderator, who was assisted by ministers belonging to the Anglican, Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churches. Sir Edward Carson sat at the preacher's right, and the Lord Mayor of Belfast at his left. A semi-military aspect was not lacking, as two picked stalwart members of the Unionist clubs and Orange lodges wearing bright sashes, acted as a guard of honor standing about the pulpit, while 500 of what is known as the reserve guard occupied seats in the gallery.

Among the notable personages present were Lord Bessford, who was greeted with loud cheers. Capt. Craig, M. P., reminded the audience that the service was a religious one, and Sir Edward Carson, who is to be looked upon as such in the real sense of the word.

Rev. Dr. McLean, in the course of his sermon declared that the Irish question at the bottom was a war against Protestantism and an attempt to establish Roman Catholic ascendancy in Ireland and to begin the disintegration of the British Empire by securing a second Parliament in Dublin. Ulstermen were ready to accept almost any programme of social or political reform but would not have Home Rule.

Similar services were held in churches and chapels in the city of Belfast and the villages in the counties of Ulster.

Sir Edward Carson on Saturday wrote his name as the first to sign the solemn covenant of Ulstermen, which binds them to use all means necessary to defend Home Rule and to refuse to recognize the authority of an Irish Parliament. He was followed by many other leaders in the campaign, whose names were added by thousands of the rank and file from the northern provinces of Ireland.

The scene around Ulster Hall, when Carson proceeded to sign the covenant, was a remarkable one. The approach to the Hall was lined by a guard of men, wearing sashes and armlets, carrying wooden staves. Other men were posted around the ground much as though an attack from the Nationalists was expected. Thus far, however, these stood by as much pleased with the semi-military display as the Ulstermen themselves. Many women signed the declaration associating themselves with the men in uncompromising opposition to the Home Rule Bill.

During the course of the day Carson received many messages conveyed by despatches, riders and signa corps, from the various parts of Ulster, informing him of the progress being made. A message from the Lord Primate was received and publicly read. "My God give you Ireland's faithful sons in trying to save our beloved Nation and Law from the degradation and disaster of religious strife and civil war."

LONDON, Sept. 29. The ball, which was to have taken place at Balmoral, has been cancelled at the last minute. The reason is understood to be that the king was engaged in consultation with Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Bona Law over the political situation. The Radical papers suggest that Bona Law was summoned to Balmoral because the king was either unwell or alarmed at the open threats of rebellion in Ulster, or annoyed at a ceremonial incident in Sir Edward Carson's progress in Belfast. The Unionist press thinks that Law's presence at Balmoral is accounted for by foreign rather than domestic policy. The Standard says it cannot be overlooked that there are grave international circumstances and possibilities in which both this country and Russia are deeply interested. Events in the near East are serious and concern all the European Powers, whilst certain possibilities, which have been referred to, must long ago have been the subject of correspondence between representatives of Britain and the Powers, whose interests lie along parallel lines.

BELFAST, Sept. 29. Prior to embarking for England Sir Edward Carson delivered a speech in which he said he did not know under what circumstances he would return to Belfast. If it were to be for peace he preferred it; but if it were to fight he would not shrink. We have already, he added, which have put our enemies in such difficulty that to night they are asking what our enemies are doing to do. Our enemies better make up their minds on one thing—not to interfere with Belfast.

Kicked By Horse.

Boy Breaks His Arm.

Parties who came over from Bell Island to-day report a painful accident which occurred there on Monday last. The victim was a young lad named Dwyer, aged about eight years. With some other companions he was playing near a horse, which was grazing off the public road, when the animal kicked out, the hoof striking Dwyer near the left elbow, breaking the arm. The injured lad suffered severe pain, and had to go to a doctor who set the fracture.

A few days ago a boy aged eight, residing in Pouch Cove, received a kick from a horse which came near ending his life. The animal's hoof took him in the face, cut him badly and fractured his jaw bone. The boy was brought quickly to the city and placed in the house of a friend on York Street, where he is being attended by Dr. Anderson.

Fierce Fight.

At 5 p.m. Saturday Consts. Greene and Churchill were compelled to eject a man who was under the influence of drink from saloons which he entered. Eventually the man became unruly and the officers had to arrest him. They were conveying him down the street when the prisoner, a son, a burly chap, and also under the influence, appeared on the scene and attacked the two policemen; a fierce fight ensued and the aggressor and the police time and again rolled in the mud and the officers uniforms were covered with it. Constable Tucker now fortunately arrived, the man was handcuffed and the father and son were conveyed to the station. Greene's face and hands were cut but not severely. The attitude of some of the spectators was hostile to the police and these may get into trouble.

Busy at Limeville

At Limeville, near Port au Port, there is quite a hum of business on at present and over 300 men are engaged working in the limestone quarries or about the works. A cargo of machinery was recently landed there, and about 200 feet of the pier has been built and the work of completing it will be rushed. They are also building a fine road down to the pier and quite a number of people are coming there to live, so that soon a number of new houses will be erected. There is an inexhaustible supply of the best limestone there, and steamers will ply regularly between Limeville and Sydney with cargoes of the stone which is indispensable in the smelting of iron ore.

The presentation was accompanied by a neatly executed address of congratulation, signed by Manager Brown, the heads of the various departments, and Messrs. J. J. McDougall, J. B. Murphy, J. M. Greene, L. C. Murphy, R. Burnham, H. A. Lehr and A. Tucker of the office staff, Dr. Gouthro and J. J. Miller, chief accountant. A Dangerous Practice. Scores Drowned.

The practice of throwing banana and orange peels on the sidewalks which is very prevalent here, is a highly dangerous one. One case illustrates this. Saturday night, as Mr. Joseph Molloy, of the West End, was walking down Water Street west he slipped on a banana peel and went through the window in Mrs. Radford's shop. He fortunately escaped without being cut but received a fright that he will not soon forget. Parties caught throwing these peels on the street should be prosecuted.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 23.—A steamer with 150 saw mill workers aboard was rammed by a tug boat on the Dvina river near Archangel to-day.

It will be impossible to ascertain the complete casualties until the workmen report for duty at the saw mills to-morrow.
