Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

AN OLD FRIEND IN A NEW SETTING.

As I was turning over the pages of a magazine, I stopped at an illustration because the woman's face in it was so familiar. Whom did it look like? I knew I had seen a face like that before. And in that odd way in which we know things without exactly remembering them, I had a feeling I had seen it in some totally different setting. It must be a resemblance to some friend of mine, I thought. It was an oval face, with attractive but unusually large eyes. I racked my brain for names and acquaintances with faces like that.

I'd like to see that model. Then it came over me that it was an acquaintance—but only one. I printed page. The oval face, the large mouth, the characteristics of all the heroines of that illustration. I looked back some magazines and found her. The first time she had been a girl, a musician falls in with the second was the in a triangle story. I suppose she behind that pictured face model. I'd love to see her and how much like and how much the pictures she is.

Do you think it is interesting to the work of the various promoters, watch the same types emerging over and over and now and then a new one? Perhaps there are many people who do not take an interest in any of these pictured personalities of the printed page. If there are, I am sorry for them. They miss a source of interest and pleasure.

SYMPTOMS.

I read no able doctors' books, peruse no almanacs, which tell of frightful illnesses, pains in human backs. The more you read about disease the sicker you will feel, and you'll have mumps and housemaids' knees, and fan-tods in the heel. I used to read the almanac that boasted Hooper's pills; I kept it hanging in my shack, hard by the window sills. And when I should have studied hymns, and tracts and things like those, I read of spavins on the limbs, and bunions on the toes. And every time I read a line it filled me with despair; I found I had anthrax in my spine, and dandruff in my hair. Then from my savings bank I drew some nice ten-dollar bills, and to the drugstore promptly flew, and called for Hooper's pills. Oh, Hooper, in a palace dwelt, and Hooper's yacht was fine, and Hooper's butler used to pelt downstairs to fetch the wine; and Hooper lived in Easy Street, and Hooper rode to hounds, while I on weary, dragging feet to drugstore made my rounds. And then one morn-

I had a ray of reason in my dome, and I got up and threw away the dope that filled my home. I told myself that I was well and felt as slick as wax; glad day, when I no longer felt for Hooper's almanacs!

Irish Plot to Deport De Valera.

Americans are no more likely than Canadians to be filled with gloom at the news that there is a conspiracy on foot to drive Eamonn de Valera from his native soil—which is that of the United States, not Ireland. Eamonn may justly claim to be not merely one hundred per cent., but in reality two hundred per cent. American, for he is both North and South American, with some Irish thrown in for top-dressing. He has as much right to stay in the United States as Justice Cohan, because, like the latter, he was born there, and was just as pro-German as Cohan during the late war. He has a good deal more right to ornament the hotels, restaurants and public platforms of New York and Chicago than John Devoy of "The Gaelic American," one of the few friends of Ireland on this continent who happened to be born there. Why then should Justice Cohan have framed a plot (if certain allegations are true) to deport De Valera to a land which he had rather love at a distance. Most of us were told in childhood that money was the root of all evil, and whether that be true or not, it seems to be the bone of contention among the best little patriots who ever cheered over the drowning of women and children by submarine attack. Some months ago when the Journal intimated that the agitators against Great Britain in the United States owed much of their enthusiasm to the consciousness that there was a big melon to be cut, it received indignant letters from certain readers denouncing the suggestion as base and invidious. We would advise those readers to address their future communications to Justice Cohan and John Devoy.—Saturday Night.

BROTHERHOOD.
Under the miller's grimy shirt,
Under the sweat and the grease and dirt,
Under the rough outside you view,
Is a man who thinks and feels as you.
Go talk with him,
Go walk with him,
Sit down with him by a running stream,
Away from the things that are hissing steam.
Away from his bench,
His hammer and wrench,
And the grind of need
And the sordid deed;
And this you'll find—
As he bares his mind
In the things which count when this life is through—
He's as tender and big and as good as you.
