"St. George He Was for England."

April 23rd, the Day of England's Patron Saint.

"St. George he was for England. And before he killed the dragon He drank a pint of English ale Out of an English flagon."

I am afraid that England has been sadly neglected of her patron saint. You will scarcely find an Irishman in any part of the world who does not know that March 17th is the Feast of St. Patrick. But how many Englishmen are there who could tell you off-hand that April 23rd is St. George's Day—and, by a glorious coincidence, Shakespeare's birthday to boot? Not many, I fear.

"THE ODDIOUS STRANGER."

Nor is forgetfulness the worst injury that St. George has had to suffer at the hands of posterity. John Galsworthy, the prince of iconoclasts, denied his existence altogether, while the sceptical Gibbon identified him with a swindling Arian army contractor—one George of Cappadocia. "The odious stranger," he wrote, "disguising every circumstance of time and place, assumed the mask of a martyr, a saint, and a Christian hero; and the infamous George of Cappadocia has been transformed into the renowned St. George of England, the patron of arms, of chivalry, and of the Garter." The historian of the Roman Empire's decline and fall was, however, for once speaking without his book. As a matter of fact, George of Cappadocia laid down his inglorious life in the year 361, or about seventy years before the martyrdom of England's patron saint.

THE DRAGON EPISODE.

There is good reason to believe in the historicity of St. George, though I am afraid that in a rationalistic age like this we must be content to relegate the dragon episode to the limbo of legend; and even the "pint of English ale" on which Mr. G. K. Chesterton strongly insists, is of doubtful authenticity. He—St. George I mean—is said to have been born towards the close of the third century at Lydda, in Palestine, where his father was Governor of the city. His family came from Cappadocia, a circumstance which is, no doubt, accountable for Gibbon's strange error.

While still young he entered the army, was raised by the Emperor Diocletian to the rank of tribune, and probably served under Galerius in the Persian War, after which he appears to have removed to Beirut. There is a tradition—unhappily it is nothing more—that he was sent by Diocletian to Britain.

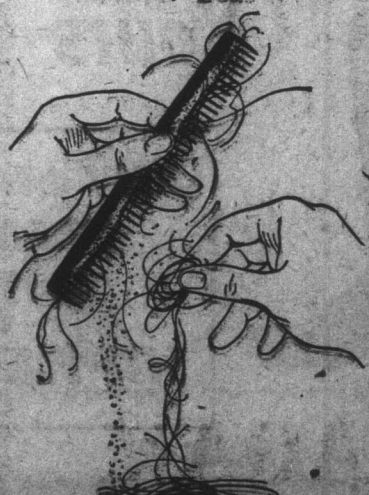

It was at Beirut (or, as it was then called, Berytus), however, that the famed encounter with the dragon took place, and, according to a modern writer on the subject, "the well is shown into which he cast the monster, and the spot where he washed the blood from his hands." His conversion to Christianity ultimately cost him his life. He refused to make sacrifices to the gods, and, after a week of tortures, was beheaded on a Good Friday.

Such, as related by Eusebius, are the main facts in the life-history of George of Lydda, and though they are lacking of corroborative testimony, there seems no reason to doubt their substantial accuracy. Certain it is that there was a cult of St. George from the very earliest times. A church in South Syria dedicated to his memory, is said to date from the year A. D. 246; while the Emperor Justinian built a magnificent church in his honour at Lydda. In the east, indeed, the memory of St. George has always been held in high honour.

He is venerated even by the Mohammedans, who believe that the soul of the prophet El-Khadr passed successively into Phineas, Elijah, and St. George.

DANDERINE

Stops Hair Coming Out; Thickens, Beautifies

35-cents buys a bottle of "Danderine" at any drug store. After one application you can not find a particle of dandruff on a falling hair. Besides, every hair shows new life, vigor, brightness, more color and abundance.

So far as England is concerned, the cult of St. George appears to have taken its origin in the Crusades. Our absentee monarch, Richard Cœur de Lion, while in the Isle of Cyprus, became acquainted with the story of St. George, and immediately adopted him as patron of himself and of his army. Henceforward—for three hundred years at least—"God and St. George" was to become the English war-cry. His festival was ordered to be kept throughout England by a Statute held at Oxford in 1222, churches, bearing his dedication sprung up throughout the country, and late in the fifteenth century, Henry VII. chose him as his principal patron.

RECOVERING HIS POSITION.

Then came the Reformation, and with it the overthrow of so many of the ancient loyalties. St. George was among the first to suffer.

In the eighteenth century St. George again fell into dispute. Happily, there is every indication that in our own day England's patron saint is once more recovering his position in the national regard. On April 23rd the Red Cross of St. George will fix from countless steeples, as a reminder of the fact that beneath that banner some of England's mightiest victories have been fought—and won.—T. MICHAEL POPE, in John O'London's Weekly.

Nickel Baritone Gets Big Recognition.

HENRY G. KELLY DELIGHTS HUGE AUDIENCES.

The popular Nickel Theatre was filled to overflowing last night to hear Mr. G. Kelly the noted baritone. Mr. Kelly was accorded a genuine Newfoundland welcome as he rendered two splendid selections, "Marguerite" and an Irish dialect number which fairly brought down the house. He sang with perfect ease and assurance that commands the strictest attention of his audience. His voice is of great range, being baritone of rich quality, and there is never the slightest deviation from the pitch. The diction is wonderful and his interpretations are exceptionally convincing. In enunciation, control, tone quality and in fact in every particular of his art, one finds the nearest approach to perfection of which the human voice is capable. To-night Mr. Kelly will repeat his numbers and without doubt will receive another such reception. A story of South Valley rich region with all the sordidness left out is told by William Duncan in "Where Men are Men," the powerful drama which was screened at this theatre last evening. In this picture the star-director is supported by a cast of well known screen players. Edith Johnson is again cast opposite Duncan.

Betty Donn Scores Hit at Crescent.

At yesterday's performances at the Crescent Theatre patrons were treated to something out of the ordinary in the line of classical singing, by Miss Betty Donn of Vaudeville and Musical Comedy fame. As Miss Donn appeared on the stage, she was immediately accorded an outburst of applause. Her singing and enunciation left nothing lacking whilst she also presents an attractive appearance, which is of additional value to her well rendered selections. Miss Donn performs with a perfect ease and grace that is quite captivating. Judging from yesterday's enthusiastic reception a very successful engagement in St. John's is assured this talented artist. Yesterday's program will be repeated to-night, and on Monday Miss Donn will appear in a complete change of program with some delightful specialties. A well-balanced entertainment is promised all who attend this popular house of amusement. At the conclusion of her song last night Miss Donn was presented with a beautiful bouquet from an appreciative admirer.

Fashions and Fads.

Many summer resort suits feature the very high collar, which is often of fur. Silk crepe frocks have resorted to organdie to fashion their wide collars and fitted cuffs.

A gaily figured frock of crepe de chine has circles of straw embroidery forming a girdle.

Many brides like the fashion of wearing their orange blossoms in the form of a diadem. A tailor of beige epinglées has collar and cuffs made of very narrow, finely-twisted ribbon. Circular insets of gold and soft colored lame relieve a gown of plain and jetted black voile.

In stockings, sheer taupe and onida lead for daytime, and mauve shades for evening wear.

Many gowns in periwinkle blue and pink and blue chiffon are decorated with tiny seashells. A frock of tomato red handkerchief linen is embroidered in white cotton and edged with net.

One of the season's whims is the dress of two materials. Satin and kasha cloth are often combined.

A blue serge frock has sleeves of string lace embroidered in red and white anduffed with black chiffon. A chic dinner gown consists of a black crepe blouse worn with a white crepe skirt painted in a bold design. A sports costume includes a frock and crepe of white kasha, and white rabbit forms the revers of the cape. Long pointed panels appear on many of the more elaborate gowns. Sometimes as many as three of these panels are shown on one frock.
