"Nay, but that honor I must take from you," he replied, smiling: "though I see that you would make an excellent courtier-far better than Du Mornay here, who never in his life made so pretty a speech. For I must lay my commands on you to keep this visit a secret, M. de Marsac. Should but the slightest whisper of it get abroad, your usefuliness, as far as I am concerned, would be gone, and gone for good!"

So remarkable a statement filled me with wonder I could scarcely disguise. It was with difficulty I found words to assure the king that his commands should be faithfully

"Of that I am sure," he answered with the utmost kindness. "Were I not, and sure, too, from what I am told of your gallantry when my cousin took Brouage, that you are a man of deeds rather than words, I should not be here with the proposition I am going to lay before you. It is this. I can give you no hope of public enployment, M. de Marsac, but I can offer you an adventure—if adventures be to your taste—as dangerous and as thankless as any Amadis ever under-

"As thankless, sire?" I stammered, doubting if I had heard aright, the expression was

"As thankless," he answered, his keen eyes seeming to read my soul. "I am frank with you, you see, sir," he continued, carelessly. "I can suggest this adventure—it is for the good of the State—I can do no more. The King of Navarre cannot be in it, nor can he protect you. Succeed or fail in it, you stand alone. The only promise I make is, that if it ever be safe for me to acknowledge the act, I will reward the doer."

He paused, and for a few moments I stared at him in shere amazement. What did he mean? Were he and the other real figures, or was I dreaming?

"Do you understand?" he asked at length, with a touch of impatience.
"Yes, sire, I think I do," I murmured, very certain in truth and reality that I did

"What do you say, then-yes or no?" he eejoined. "Will you undertake the adventure, or would you hear more before you make up your mind?"

I hesitated. Had I been a younger man by ten yoars I should doubtless have cried assent there and then, having been all my life ready enough to embark on such enterprises as offered a chance of distinction. But something in the strangeness of the king's preface, although I had it in my heart to die for him, gave me check, and I answered, with an air of great humility, "You will think me but a poor courtier now, sire, yet he is a fool who jumps in a ditch without measuring the depth. I would fain, if I may say it without disrespect, hear all that you "Then I fear," he answered quickly, "if you would have more light on the matter, my friend, you must get another candle." I started, he spoke so abruptly; but per-ceiving that the candle had indeed burned down to the socket, I rose, with many apologies, and fetched another from the cupboard. It did not occur to me at the moment, though it did later, that the king had purposely sought this opportunity of consulting his companion. I merely remarked, when I returned to my place on the bed, that they were sitting a little nearer one another, and that the king eyed me before he spoke-though he still swung one foot carelessly in the air-with close attention.

"I speak to you, of course, sir," he presently went on, "in confidence, believing you to be a honorable as well as a brave man. That which I wish you to do is briefly, and in a word, to carry off a lady. Nay," he added quickly, with a laughing grimace, "have no fear! She is no sweetheart of mine, nor should I go to my grave friend here did I need assistance of that kind. Henry of Bourbon, I pray God, will always be able to free his own lady-love. This is a State affair, and a matter of quite another character, though we cannot at present entrust you with the meaning of it.'

I bowed in silence, feeling somewhat chilled and perplexed, as who would not, having such an invitation before him? I had anticipated an affair with men only-a secret assault or a petard expedition. seeing the bareness of my room, and the honor the king was doing me. I felt I had no choice, and I answered, "That being the case, sire, I am wholly at your service."

That is well," he answered briskly, though methought he looked at Mornay reproachfully, as doubting his commendation of me. But will you say the same," he continued, removing his eyes to me, and speaking slowly, as though he would try me, "when I tell you that the lady to be carried off is the ward of the Vicomte de Turenne, whose arm is well-nigh as long as my own, and who would fain make it longer: who never gravels, as he told me yesterday, with less than 50 gentlemen, and has a thousand arquebusiers in his pay? Is the adventure still to your liking, M. de Marsac, now that you know that?"

"It is more to my liking, sire," I answered

"Understand this too," he rejoined. "It is essential that this lady, who is at present confined in the Vicomte's house at Chize, should be released; but it is equally essential that there should be no breach between the Vicomte and myself. Therefore the affair must be the work of an independent man, who has never been in my service, nor any way connected with me. If captured, vou pay the penalty without recourse

"I fully understand, sire," I answered.
"Ventre Saint Gris!" he cried, breaking into a low laugh. "I sware the man is more afraid of the lady than he is of the Vicomte! That is not the way of most of our Court. Du Mornay, who had been sitting nursing his knee in silence, pursed up his lips, though it was easy to see that he was well content with the king's approbation. He now intervened. "With your permission, sire," he said, "I will let this gentleman know the details. "Do, my friend," the king answered. 'And be short, for if we are here much longer I shall be missed, and in a twinkling the court will have found me a new mis-

He spoke in jest and with a laugh, but I saw Du Mornay start at the words, as though they were little to his liking; and I learned afterwards that the court was really much exercised at this time with the ques tion who would be the next favorite, the king's passion for the Countess de la Guiche being evidently on the wane, and that which he presently evinced for Madame de Guercheville being as yet a matter of con-

Du Mornay took no overt notice of the king's words, however, but proceeded to give me my directions. "Cnize, which you know by name," he said, "is six leagues from here. Mademoiseile de la Vire is confined in the north-west room, on the first floor, overlooking the park. More I cannot tell you, except that her woman's name is Fanchette, and that she is to be trusted. The house is well guarded, and you will need four or five men.

There are plenty of cut-throats to be hired, only see, M. de Marsac, that they are such as you can manage, and Mademoiselle takes no hurt among them. Have horses in waiting, and the moment you have released the lady ride north with her as fast as her strength will permit. Indeed, you must not spare her, if Turenne be on your heels. You should be across the Loire in 60 hours after leaving Chize."
"Across the Loire?" I exclaimed in astonishment. "Yes, sir, across the Loire," he replied, with some sternness. "Your task, be good enough to understand, is to convey Mademoiselle de la Vire with all speed to Blois. There attracting as little notice as may be, you will inquire for the Baron de Rosny at the Bleeding Heart, in the Rue de St. Denys. He will take charge of the lady, or direct you how to dispose of her, and your task will then be accomplished. You fol-

"Perfectly," I answered, speaking in my turn with some dryness. "But Mademoi-selle I understand is young. What if she will not accompany me, a stranger, entering her room at night, and by the window?"

"That has been thought of," was the answer. He turned to the King of Navarre, who, after a moment's search, produced a small object from his pouch. This he gave to his companion, and the latter transferred it to me. I took it with curiosity. It was the half of a gold carolus, the broken edge of the coin being rough and jagged. "Show that to Mademoiselle, my friend," Du Mornay continued, "and she will accompany

you. She has the other half.
"But be careful," Henry added eagerly, to make no mention, even to her, of the King of Navarre. You mark me, M. de Marsac! If you have at any time occasion to speak of me, you may have the honor of calling me your friend, and referring to me always in the same manner.'

Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but all to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine, and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured; and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. MR. MEREDITH'S POSITION.

A Review of the Turnings and Twistings of the Toronto City Solicitor and His Kenchmen in This City.

Mr. Meredith has been renominated by the London Conservatives. A friendly writer asserts that the speeches were full of confidence and fight, and it appears from the report that the Government really. would be defeated this time, and referred to Mr. Meredith as the coming Premier, a title which he has borne as far back as the memory of the oldest inhabitant goes. Mr. Meredith said a few days ago that he would not venture to predict the result of the election-a remark which, if not so full of "fight and confidence" as those of his Londonffriends, is characterized by greater wisdom and safety.

Mr. Meredith has also recently repudiated the idea of raising the "no-Popery" cry. Mayor Essery, who supported him strongly at the meeting, also supported the P. P. A. candidate in East Lambton, and made some of the most violent anti-Catholic speeches of the campaign. Another speaker, Ald. Coo, is a sympathizer with the P. P. A. movement. Mr. Edmund Meredith, Q.C., said that Roman Catholics had been pampered by the Mowat Government for ten years, and he wanted Catholics to be excluded from representation on the high school board. Mr. Meredith's repudiations of no-Popery do not appear to have frightened away the P. P. A., for in Welland Major Hiscott is running with the support of the P. P. A. and the Conservatives; and one of Mr. Meredith's most prominent supporters, Mr. A. F. Campbell, M.P.P., has been applying for membership in the secret Against these vagaries of some of his followers Mr. Meredith may set his recent repudiation of no-Popery, and the fact that the financial critic of his party, Mr. Clancy, is one of the class whom the P. P. A. would exclude from office. Probably Major Hiscott and the others would not have strayed off into this field if the leader had laid out a clearly-defined path for them. But the fact is that they have been left largely to their own devices. During the time that the P. P. A. and Patron movements were attracting the attention of the whole Province, there was no expression of opinion from the leader, no word of counsel, no sign for the guidance of his followers. He neglected, at a critical time, the prime duty of leadership. He was silent during the bye-elections, in which candidates of the two new orders were put in the field; and in East Lambton he virtually allowed the P. P. A. candidate to represent his party.

This, we submit, is not the attitude for a leader in these days of eager inquiry and free discussion. The leader, if worthy, occupies his post by virtue of his exceptional knowledge of public affairs, good judgment and ability to advise his fellowelectors as to the justice, wisdom and patriotism of any measure that may be proposed. He need not regard himself as infallible, nor despise the opinions of others, but he ought not to remain silent while the discussion is going on all about him, while a mischievous movement is gathering strength, or a good cause is falling for lack of assistance.

When Mr. Meredith did at last break silence, almost torced to do so by the invariable practice of the debate on the address, he failed to arouse the euthusiasm of his followers or to attract public attention. The only thing that he added to he programme was a proposal for biennial sessions, a system which, however, well suited to the State Legislatures, is not adapted to the institutions of a country where responsible Government prevails. On Tuesday Mr. Clancy dragged into the light of to-day another of Mr. Meredith's policies which that gentleman would probably have preferred to leave in the darkness of oblivion. This was his proposal that the most important industry in the Province should not be represented by a member of the Cabinet. Mr. Meredith and Mr. Creighton moved: "That while this House concurs in the proposition to give greater attention by the Executive Government to the agricultural interests of the Province than has hitherto been done, it is of opinion that that end can be attained without incurring the expense of adding another member to the Executive Council, and the inevitable additional expense which will be consequent on such addition." The Empire has a good deal to say about the farmers being aroused, determined to cast off the yoke of the Government. We do not expect to see them aroused into frantic enthusiasm over Mr. Meredith's proposal, so approvingly quoted by Mr. Clancy, Mr. Meredith's position, we admit, is one of great diffi-culty. He finds himself opposed to a Government of admitted honesty and efficiency; he cannot hold out any hope of improvement in that respect as a reason for putting him in office, and he is unable to devise, or, at all events, to unite his followers upon any policy large enough to fill the public mind. Hence he and they are in constant danger of becoming entangled in undesirable alliances. That has been the history of the party during all the years of the Liberal Administration .- [Toronto Globe.
