EAST MIDDLESEX TEACHERS

See Pupil's Work.

Parents should see the pupil's work, as an incentive to the child, and because it arouses interest in them also.

This branch of work should be correlated as far as possible with the other subjects. Greater freedom should be given to the child to express his own ideas.

Pupils can model objects, and should be allowed to illustrate short stories.

Miss Campbell closed her very interesting address by a discussion of various materials to be used in constructive work.

Composition.

Miss Daisy Andrews followed with an address on "Composition," which she defined as the expression of thought.

The duty of the teacher is to store the pupils' mind with ideas, and show him how to develop them.

Every pupil must have knowledge.

In the higher grades, the teacher of composition has a harder task, because he must make his subject far more interesting.

Abstract themes should be avoided, especially in the case of small pupils. These little ones can only write short sentences.

Their errors should be corrected and shown to them with a full explanation.

In the second grade pictures may be used as subjects about which to write.

The memorizing of good poetry will also help any student.

Rapid Writing.

In the third grade, Miss Campbell said rapid writing was very apt to spoil many compositions, as they are badly spelled and often illegible.

This should be checked, as the more important work that is to follow will suffer and a pupil may contract a style that will remain with him throughout life.

Letter writing and business correspondence should at this time be started.

In the fourth book, debates and talks should be encouraged, as it is necessary for every one to know how to talk as well as write well.

Address On Penmanship.

Mr. J. W. Westervelt gave a most instructive address on writing.

Penmanship, he said, was a very difficult subject to teach properly.

Pupils must be guided all along the line of their course.

The teacher must be interested in his work before he can interest his pupil.

Every effort should be made to see that the pupil puts into practice what has been taught in the class.

Business demands good writing and penmanship and must be practical.

The first requisite is to become proficient yourself before you teach.

Development exercises are very important.

The free-arm movement is the only correct way to write for business legibility and speed.

Motion is the prime element in penmanship and unless a proper motion is obtained, the best results will not follow.

A correct position at the desk should be taught.

The teacher should pay the closest attention to all these details and should invariably write in the way in which he wants his pupils to write.

All pupils should practice writing on the blackboard, as it teaches them the free-arm movement.

The teacher should always encourage and take a kindly interest in the work and never try to discourage a pupil by making too much of his faults, and should pay more attention not to what is done, but to how it is done.

A very hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Westervelt by the teachers for his excellent address.

Leaving Examinations.

The meeting was brought to a close by a discussion on the leaving examinations, in which it was pointed out that this year the examination will be in composition, algebra, geography, bookkeeping, geometry, arithmetic, grammar, history, literature, elementary science. Spelling will be marked on the composition paper and writing on the geography paper.

Officers Elected.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Mr. H. McFayden; vice-president, Miss McChesney; committee, Miss Belle Campbell, Mr. C. Warren, Miss McMartin, Miss Coombs. Mr. McNaughton was elected delegate to the Ontario Educational Association.

Among the speakers who took part in the general discussion on literature were: Miss Fox, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Duncan, Miss McChesnie, Miss Sutton, Mr. Brown, Mr. Dunn, Miss Carter.

DEATH OF A VETERAN MASON.

Lyons, N. Y., April 16.—Joseph McCall, who had been treasurer of this place for more than a quarter of a century, died at his home here last night. He was 92 years old. Mr. McCall was one of the oldest members of the Masonic and Oddfellow organizations in Western New York.

AUTO RACE.

Portland, Ore., April 16.—A dispatch to the Oregonian from Castle Rock, Wash., says that the French car in the New York to Paris race, arrived there last night, and will proceed to Seattle today.

LIVELY EASTER TRAVEL.

Montreal, April 16.—As an indication of the prosperity of Canadians generally up to last night the reservations for New York equaled the total Easter business done last year by the railways running out of Montreal, with another full day (usually the best day) to hear from.

There are 1,047 women to 1,000 men in England, but in Italy only 995 to each 1,000.

FOR A MILLION OF MONEY

BY ARTHUR W. MARCHMONT

Author of "By Right of Sword," "When I Was Czar," etc., etc.

Copyrighted, 1908.

"Never mind the name, my man. Take my message."

"I will see if my mistress can see you," and he put him in the little room where visitors of uncertain position were left to wait.

Olive went down and met the footman. "That'll be the gintleman I was to take right up to her the minute he came," she said; and waited while Purvis was fetched. She walked up in front of him.

As she opened the door, Mrs. Merridew asked eagerly: "Well, what was it?"

"Sure, here is the gintleman, ma'am. This way, sor."

She made way, and Purvis stepped forward.

"Well, Rachael," he said.

There was no reply. Mrs. Merridew had fallen back unconscious.

The stroke which Olive had dealt by bringing Purvis straight into the presence of Mrs. Merridew had gone right home, and uttering a little cry, she knelt by the unconscious woman and set about restoring her.

Purvis looked on with a grim, hard smile, then sat down to wait for the return to consciousness. "It's only a fainting fit from joy at seeing me. Let her bide a bit, my girl. She'll come round all right," he said presently.

"It's deadly ill she is, sor. She's been ailin' badly this last day or two," replied Olive. "Oh, my dear mistress!"

"Ah, got wind in some way of the pleasure in store for her," he said drily, and grinned.

"An' it's mesilf that's caused this by bringin' you up widout warnin'," and Olive wrung her hands. "Sure, it's discharged I'll be."

"No you won't. I won't give you away. Perhaps you did me a good turn, not knowing it. That'll be all right." He spoke very confidently.

When Mrs. Merridew came to herself, shuddering and trembling, Olive redoubled her attentions, feeling, it must be confessed, a consummate hypocrite and extremely uncomfortable when Mrs. Merridew thanked her in a gentler tone than she had ever known her to use. Her agitation was almost piteous to witness, and at the sight of Purvis, who had carefully placed himself so that he would be the first object she would see, her terror and dismay were such that she all but fainted again.

Then she sent Olive away, first telling her to say nothing of what had occurred, and that it had no connection with the stranger's presence. Olive answered with a voluble promise, and running from the room, hurried to the recess.

"Take your time, Rachael," she heard Purvis say. "Get over your delight at seeing me again. We shall have lots of time to talk now."

There was a long silence. Then Mrs. Merridew asked: "Did that girl hear anything?" The tone was very low and nervous.

"Not a word. She was so scared when I forced my way up here to you that she was pretty well out of her siliy senses." He lied glibly and with the coolness of long experience.

"Why did you come here?"

"That's a good one, that is. Where should I come if not—home? I suppose you thought I should trot off to Chicago, eh? Suited you a deal better, wouldn't it?"

"How did you learn I was here?"

"Does it matter? If you want to know, I heard all about you from a gentleman who is still serving his majesty, where I came from—same service, you know, that you helped so kindly to get me into. I heard all about that, too, years ago." He paused and laughed unpleasantly.

She murmured a protest.

This angered him, and the laugh turned to a sort of snarl. "Don't lie; I know it. I swore then that I'd have your life for it, and every day since then I've taken that oath night and morning. It's kept me alive in all that hell time in prison. And it kept me straight there, earning every good mark I could, so that the time should come as soon as possible when I could begin to look for you. But I didn't hope then I'd be able to walk straight out of the prison to you like this."

She made no reply, and Olive guessed she was too frightened.

"So you went back to the old name, eh? Mrs. Merridew? Not Parmenter. Thought that 'ud put me off the scent a bit, I suppose. But you see I got the office all right, and here I am," A pause followed. "You've done yourself well, Rachel," he went on with an oath. "I could scarcely believe I was on the right track when they brought me here. How have you worked it?" She did not reply. "Don't fool about with me," he added angrily "it won't pay you."

"It is common knowledge," replied Mrs. Merridew in a firmer tone than she had before been able to command. "I inherited it from Gregory Parmenter."

"What!" His astonishment was intense. He whistled and then swore. "From Parmenter! And how in the name of everything did he get it?"

"Married again, a rich wife, and piled up a fortune."

"Married again, and you——." He broke off and burst out into a peal of boisterous laughter. "If that doesn't beat the band!" After a pause he added, in a very different tone, "I see. And that cable from Chicago was crooked, eh? A dodge to get me out there, so that you might enjoy all your well-earned fortune quietly on this side? Oh, Rachael, you're a beauty!"

"I meant to provide for you and give you ample means."

"You thoughtful darling! You dear, unselfish creature! And as big a liar as ever, eh, Rachael? You sly, treacherous devil, you. I know your 'ample means.' Enough to drink myself to death on, eh? And do it quickly, eh? So that you might enjoy all this by yourself, eh? Well, you see, I've come to enjoy it with you—to have my share of it all, see? Half, or more than half, if I choose to take it, see? To help my sweet, affectionate wife to spend her fortune. And, damme, I mean to have it, too!" And he dashed a fist down on the table.

There was another pause, and then he laughed.

"Unless you, too, have married again. By heaven, that would cap it all!"

"I have not married again."

"Hanged if I'm not sorry to hear it, for I'd have jugged you for it, to let you have a taste of the hell life you sent me to." Intense vindictiveness was in every syllable of the threat. "Do you live alone here, then?"

"Gilbert is with me."

"Oh, that young blackguard, is he? Well, don't let me see too much of him. He'd better get out. The same house won't hold us two long, and I'm going to have the say so in this house; mind that."

"You had better tell him that yourself."

"Oh, I'll tell him that fast enough, don't you fear. Where is he?"

"Out in his motor car."

"Ho, his motor car," he scoffed, in an affected tone. "He's a swell, too, I suppose. Curse the young beast. I'll motor car him," and he swore again viciously. Then another change came in his tone. There was feeling in it, as he put the next question. "And Selma? Is she here too."

"No, George." She spoke with hesitation, using his name for the first time.

"And why not? Tell me; don't lie! Isn't my child good enough to be here if that swine of a son of yours is here? Don't you dare to lie to me about her, I tell you. Bring her here. There's only one soft spot left in my heart, and she fills it. The only thought that ever made me waver in that resolve to have your life for your infernal treachery was Selma. Don't you dare to lie to me about Selma."

"You had better know the truth. She never knew you were her father. When you were—when you went away——"

"When I was jugged through you, you mean. You may as well say it," he broke in fiercely.

"When you were convicted and I went back to the name of Merridew. I gave her another name——"

"Why not Merridew? Why not your own, curse you?"

MISSES' SAILOR BLOUSE—6115.

The jaunty sailor blouse is a general favorite, and certainly no style is more becoming to the young girl. The one here pictured is distinguished by a prettily-shaped yoke, finished by rows of stitching. Dark blue flannel was selected for the making, but other materials are equally suitable, such as linen, madras, pique and serge. The medium size will require two yards of 44-inch material.

Misses' sailor blouse. No. 6115. Sizes for 12, 14 and 16 years.

A pattern of the accompanying illustration will be mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

A BIRTHDAY PRESENTATION

British Peers Start Fund for Memorial Statue at Quebec.

London, April 16. — An important movement is on foot to make a national birthday presentation to Canada at the time of the Quebec tercentenary. The Duke of Argyll and Lords Aberdeen, Derby, Lansdowne and Minto recently issued an invitation to a number of distinguished persons, suggesting that a fund be raised here as a substantial public contribution towards the £250,000 understood to be necessary for transforming the historic battlefields into a public park. A meeting of the promoters of the movement was held at the Mansion House today, the lord mayor presiding, when an executive committee was appointed, whereof Viscount Middleton is chairman, and Lords Strathcona and Mount Stephen members.

Mr. Arthur Grenfell stated that a suggestion had been made that the English participation should take the form of a memorial to Wolfe and Montcalm.

The response already has been very gratifying, and the lord mayor has acceded to a request to call a public meeting, when the Duke of Argyll and Lords Lansdowne and Derby will speak.

PROF. KOCH FLEES

Lion-Hunting Chicago Folk Drive Him Away to Milwaukee.

Chicago, Ill., April 16.—"I am literally driven from Chicago, where I came on Monday for a week's rest by oversolicitous friends and citizens and newspaper reporters, and I am obliged to leave at once," declared Dr. Robert Koch, the German scientist, last night. He packed his five large trunks and had them shipped to St. Louis by express, tagged "Hold till called for within two or three weeks," paid his bill, bundled his wife and his brother from St. Louis into a carriage and cab, and was driven to the union station, where he boarded a train for Milwaukee.

The interruptions which so disturbed the scientist reached a climax yesterday, when a party of local scientists and several citizens stormed his apartments with pressing invitations for banquets and social gatherings.
