to London.

A citizen in close touch with conditions existing between the city and county, and with a capacity for mathematics, has figured out that the county, in offering to pay 20 per cent of joint buildings, is giving the city much the best of the bargain.

He figures that on the basis of the proposed agreemnt the county was GRAND TRUNK MEN only entitled to pay $123,000 of th $500,000 to be expended, when, as matter of fact, the representatives of the councy agreed to pay $200,000 of the cost. By this the city would be making $77,000 cash, in addition to obtaining the best site in the city, and the most imposing city building. Some Figures.

His figures are as follows: Of the joint building to cost $400,000, discuss anything concerning their trip the city would utilize two-thirds of the space, which would include offices for east.

every civic department. This proportion would amount to $266,000.

The court house, including judges' chambers, and the offices for the administration of justice, would occupy another third, costing $134,000. Of this the civic and county would now the city and county would pay equal shares. The city would in consequence pay $67,000, and the county $67,000.

The balance $100,000 would be expended in other buildings. The county would use exclusively its own municipal buildings, costing $40,000. The city would have a police county costing $20,000. It would cost $30,000 to buy land for proposed extensions, and of this the city eral conditions with the officials.

short time to settle the matter of a would expend $24,000 and the county The county would require a registry office, which would entail the expenditure of $10,000 additional, to be borne entirely by the county.

By adding the figures of the above, it would be seen that the city would expend $377,000, and the county $123,000. That would be the proportions each would have to pay if the agreements were carried out.

The Reasoning.

Now, he reasons, what does the county ffer to give for this room? In the first the parties mentioned at once. place the county council agrees to pay Mayor Graham (president).

In addition, the county would give the Baker. ite, which is worth at least $100,000. This is a particularly good location. "The proposition reduced to cold figures, means that the county would pay $200,000 for their share of the buildings, when figured on the basis of usage, they would require to ray but $123,000," the gentleman explained. "That is a remarkably good bargain from the city's standpoint, and I do not see why it does not accept it. Any cold blooded businessman would not hesitate a minute. I think the county mer were generous."
