

MR. BLAKE'S ADDRESS.

In another column will be found the address of the Hon. Mr. Blake to the electors of West Durham. It is an able, vigorous and withal carefully prepared manifesto. But it is not only an address to the free and independent electors of Durham—it is an appeal to the Canadian people.

It is mainly critical, dealing with the record of the present government. The redistribution bill is scathingly denounced. Their Pacific railway policy is similarly treated, the great point being that government and parliament declined to give the people an opportunity of expressing an opinion on the bargain made with the syndicate.

The tariff issue is next discussed. Any criticism we may have on this portion of the address we must reserve, merely directing attention to the following words: "Our adversaries wish to present to you an issue as between the present tariff and absolute free trade. This is not the true issue."

If the honorable gentleman includes the Globe among our adversaries he states the case ably and pointedly, but if not then we must remind him that he has overlooked the paper that has been the main source of the present misunderstanding. If we may use the word, on the tariff Everyone of independent judgment must re-echo Mr. Blake's criticism of the north-west land policy, and the civil service commission.

His arraignment of the government on the boundary question is the ablest passage in the paper and is the strongest plank in his platform. And he is just as convincing in his general argument in favor of provincial rights. So much for the critical part of the address. The constructive part deals with the members and their election by the people. The Globe would abolish it.

The Irish question is touched on in a manly way, and shares with parliament generally any credit that may have come to him for the action he took on the Costigan resolution. Lastly he claims the right of Canada to make her own treaties, and says he favors a true national policy, and every measure tending to the real progress of our country and the fulfillment of its great destiny.

But besides these two positive planks—reorganization of the senate and the vindication of the right to make our own commercial treaties—the critical portion of Mr. Blake's address implies several other positive planks, namely: he would confirm the boundary award; he would maintain provincial rights; he would ameliorate the monopoly of the syndicate bargain; he would introduce better land regulations in the Northwest; he would make the tariff less defective, less unjust; and he would reduce the cost of government.

Let every elector, every citizen, read the address and ponder over it. THE ENGLISH VIEW OF THE ASSASSINATIONS. It will probably turn out that the cable has dealt more leniently with the murderers of Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Burke than the facts warranted. After the first shock had passed, there appeared to be in the cable despatches a tendency to smooth the matter over, to make it appear that the event was no so terrible a one after all that soon the excitement would blow over, and Mr. Gladstone's policy of conciliation would go on as before. We, the correspondents of the Tribune, and pointed out that on account of thought feeling against the murderers would rather force instead of weakening. The fuller accounts now coming by mail show that the murders are regarded as the answer of a faction to Gladstone's message of peace. His peaceful message is spurned, and the country knows it.

The London correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing on the Tuesday after the murders, says that radical philosophers in England and the Fenians in Ireland, will be held largely responsible for the crime. Neither of these two had any but the faintest condemnation of former murderers; natural enough that there should be some murmurs now; when their policy of doing nothing to prevent or punish murder is tried. Such a correspondence account of the prevailing feeling in England. And we make no doubt that he is telling the truth, on competent observation, too. The question now is—can Gladstone govern the country and still maintain his alliance with Chamberlain and Parnell? Casually speaking, the thing appears utterly impossible. Even after that has been conceded, the latest despatches bring us news of war to the knife, declared by Mr. Gladstone can work through the trouble. He may say that throw up the sponge—and advise the queen that he feels it his duty to resign, and to make way for a strong government. Then, perhaps, the extremists will learn the cause of Ireland has lost by the policy of murder.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE ROPE NECESSARY. Three executions took place in the United States on Friday last, and two of them were horrible and shameful exhibitions. Leighton in New York and Ren in Tennessee were slowly tortured to death by strangulation, owing to the blundering ignorance of the hangmen employed by the authorities to take the forfeited lives of the murderers. Contrasted with executions in America, those of Europe are incomparably better managed. In England recently a murderer was hanged, and as all the despatches showed, his death occurred instantly. He was executed by an expert hangman. On this continent two out of every three executions are characterized by scenes which make one shiver to read about. It is an open question whether any person favors hanging as a means of putting criminals out of existence. It is no more shameful except by tradition than any

THE REAL ISSUES BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

To THE WORLD: It is of importance that the people should understand what are the real issues in the coming elections. The national policy was the real issue of 1878. All know that now. At the amphitheatres wherein nightly meetings were held in 1878 Sir Charles Tupper, Sir John A. Macdonald, and Sir Samuel Tilley spoke, and the national policy to come was the leading topic—as it was in all parts of the country. One of the best speeches of the night, which penetrated the common mind, was made from the platform at one of the meetings by Sir S. Tilley, on the future of Canada, and especially the Northwest. He dwelt on the glorious prospects for the Northwest, and especially the Northwest, as a whole, and especially the Northwest, as a whole, and especially the Northwest, as a whole.

THE CHINESE QUESTION. The turning up of the Chinese question at this time is not fortunate for the Globe. Of course the Mail is able, with the greatest ease, to show that the Globe, and every advocate of the Chinese question, is wrong. Even this, with all its advantages, need not be resorted to since the development of electricity. The electric chair in which the murderer might be employed. A powerful battery is connected with it, and as a signal the circuit is completed and life is extinguished painlessly by the shock without mutilation of the body.
