The same paper suggests that it only now remains for the Canadian Pacific to lay a cable from Vancouver to Yokohama, and this suggestion is warmly taken up by The New York Herald as the only thing necessary to complete an already great system. From other sources come suggestions that the C.P.R. should secure a Canadian terminus on the east and float its own steamers to England over the Atlantic as it does to Japan over the Pacific seas. These suggestions are among the many that are being made by the great financial operators of England and the continent. They show well the wide interest the achievement of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the High Court at Sault Ste. It is most amusingly foolish when it tries to be wise.

In reducing the distance from Yokohama to London by one-half, the Canadian Pacific Railway achieved something important to Canada and to the commercial world, and the importance of which is recognised in Europe if not in Grip office.
