HON. FRANK SMITH.

HON. FRANK SMITH is one of our self-made men, and the job reflects much credit upon him. He came to this country several years ago as a poor boy, and after the customary ups and down, secured employment in a grocery store. By "unfailing courtesy and strict attention to business," he rose step by step until at length he reached the easy chair of head boss. Meanwhile he became known as a public man of the milder sort, more thanks being due for this to his standing as a good Catholic than to any extraordinary ability he possessed. He now occupies a seat in the Canadian Senate (for which we are not disposed to blame him unduly), and also occupies a chair in the present Cabinet, without portfolio. He is best known, however, as the late chief owner of the Toronto Street Railway franchise, a business out of which, it is generally believed, he made a pot of money.
