NO. 1

January 8, 1949.

The following is the text of a statement which General A. G. L. McNaughton, Canadian permanent delegate to the United Nations and representative of Canada on the Security Council, will deliver over the Trans-Canada network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at 7:45 p.m., Saturday, January 8, 1949. General McNaughton, under the rotation procedure, is President of the Security Council for the month of January.

"It is a great privilege for me to speak to you for a few minutes today concerning the work of the Security Council of the United Nations. As you may know, the Presidency of the Security Council rotates each month according to the English alphabetical order of the eleven member states. In the present month Canada provides the President of the Council and it is in that role, rather than as a Canadian representative, that I would like to take this opportunity of saying a few words to you.

The Council, I am certain, will spare no effort in its search for peaceful solutions.

"These three political questions which I have mentioned are certainly among the most urgent and difficult problems with which the Council will be faced in January. In another item on its agenda, however, - namely Kashmir - satisfactory progress towards a final peaceful solution is evident. A cease-fire has been ordered by India and Pakistan and all who have been concerned with this matter in the United Nations have been greatly heartened to read their joint communique of January 1. This is a very important document from which I would like to quote the last paragraph. After referring to the acceptance by the two Governments of the United Nations Kashmir Commissions' proposals, and the arrangements for a cease-fire, the communique goes on to say: 'The Governments of India and Pakistan sincerely hope that this decision, which is being implemented on the first day of the New Year, may bring to the people of Jammu and Kashmir lasting peace and to the peoples of Pakistan and India a sense of closer friendship.' This successful achievement by the two parties,
