

Robert Baldwin, on three occasions in 1833, is donor not only of law books, but of a family bible, a prayer-book, Goldsmith's works and Warburton's sermons and finally of six metal casts of the Society's armorial bearings and the wooden model from which they were cut. Other donors were Simon Washburn, Chief Justice Robinson, George S. Boulton, James Edward Small, Admiral Augustus Baldwin, Hon. Archibald McLean, William Dummer Powell and Sir William Campbell, also Dr. Dunlop, who gave works on medical jurisprudence.

The Advocates' Society.—Half-a-dozen neatly kept books in manuscript now held by the Law Society contain a record of the proceedings of an admirable club or debating society, maintained by the students, dating back to 1820 and called the Advocates' Society. Its affairs were conducted with parliamentary form and dignity.

By an ordinance of this Society passed in 1821, it was provided that the rank of each officer and member respectively should be: The Benchers; The Keeper of the Great Seal; The Treasurer; The Advocate; The Prothonotary; the Senior Student, and lastly the Junior Students according to their standing.

In Michaelmas term, 1822, Robert Baldwin signs as Treasurer; in November, 1823, he is styled "The right trusty Robert Baldwin, Keeper of the Seal." In the same year he was Vice-Bencher.

In Trinity term, 1823, there were admitted as members among others, Donald Bethune, David W. Smith, James Boulton, John Lyons, Richard Cartwright Robinson, Daniel Sullivan, who was brother of Judge Sullivan but died young, Horace Ridout, George S. Jarvis, George Boswell, David L. Fairfield, afterwards Judge of the Prince Edward County Court, Charles Richardson and John Fennings Taylor all of York, James Hunter Samson of Kingston, Marcus F. Whitehead, Port Hope.
