BASEBALL

It was a beautiful game of ball. The Londons played without an error. An errorless game is not necessarily interesting, but it is satisfactory. This game was interesting, as well as satisfactory. There was plenty of hitting and probably the best feature of the day was the superb manner in which the infielders of both teams nipped budding hits by the smartest, cleanest field work seen here this season. The local fans must have had a promonition that yesterday's game was to be high-class. The attendance was better than it has been on any but holidays for many weeks. Or it may be that liberal pat-ronage may have had a good effect on the players. Both teams are to be congratulated on entire absence of senseless kicking and nagging. They simply played bail for all they were worth. re was snap, spirit, ginger, or whatever that indefinable quality that puts life into a player may best be described by, all through the game.

The Hams made no impression on Cooper until the fourth inning, when Schrall singled to left field and tallied on Congalton's three-sacker. After Elton had gone out at first bag, mighty McKevitt struck out and Phillips went out from short to first, leaving Congalton on third base. In the six'h inning, Congalton again placed the ball in left field for three bases, scoring Elton, who had singled to center, and again Congalton was left on third. A two-sacker by Conwell, a single by Hagerman, and McCann's out to Reed gave the visitors one more run in the Cooper was quite effective, and steady throughout, issuing only two passes, neither of which affected the game. For London, Mohler led off with a sacker in the first inning, but was caught at the plate, and no one scored.

ning without a hit. Jones drew a pass, stole second and third, and came home on McCann's error, the latter dropping the ball when Jones was boxed between third base and the plate.

Congalton's muff of Mohler's high fly in the third let Mohler get to second. He reached third on Reed's out at first and tallied on McFadden's single to left. Jones singled and Cope drew a pass, filling the bases. Then Franck fouled out, retiring the side.

But it didn't matter. Everything came right in the sixth inning. Lohman drew a pass. Cooper and Reed singled, and they all tallied on McFadden's homer. The big first baseman, who has not been doing much batting lately, rose to the occasion, and tucked the ball snugly under the sign-fence, and he could have gone around the bases several times before it was found. There was no need of the Londons tallying any more after that. The score: LONDON.
