Samuel S. McClure, the editorial policies of whose newspapers are generally regarded as strongly pro-German, returned home apparently convinced that the allies will emerge from the contest victorious. When questioned regarding his belief, Mr. McClure said, "Well, you have got to take into consideration the size of the populations of the various nations allied against the Teutonic countries."

A. P. Andrew of the American ambulance corps in France, was another passenger. He hopes to take back with him fifty additional men when he returns to France two months hence. He says the corps now has 112 Harvard men, and that fifty-one American universities and colleges are represented in it. "The allies," he said, "have the up per hand in the fighting at the western front. The movement of the allied troops is like clock-work. The officers are able to tell today lust where they will be tomorrow. The movement is slow, but nevertheless certain."
